INTRODUCTION

The North Atlantic Region of the National Park Service encompasses the states of New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Massachusetts, Vermont, New Hampshire, and Maine. It administers 38 individual park units that vary from Maine's Acadia National Park, the only national park by title in the region, to the birthplace of John F. Kennedy; from the Statue of Liberty to Elizabeth Cady Stanton's home in Seneca Falls, New York; and from the innovative experiment in urban recovery at Lowell National Historical Park to Adams National Historic Site, the home of four generations of the Adams family.

Over the past five decades the National Park Service has devoted millions of dollars to research designed to improve its collective knowledge of the cultural resources over which it exerts administrative control. In the North Atlantic Region alone, cultural resource research projects resulted in almost 1,000 individual reports. These reports, prepared by NPS researchers or under contract to Service specifications, permit the North Atlantic Region to manage the roughly 700 historic structures, hundreds of archeological sites, and related artifact collections so that they will be preserved, protected, and indeed, left "unimpaired for the enjoyment of future generations."

Because of the Service's unique mission to preserve and interpret the cultural resources placed under its control by Congress or the President, the research it conducts focuses on the tangible remains of the past. Buildings, bridges, roads, archeological sites, historic landscapes, historic furnishings, statues, and vast artifact collections are examined in detail, placed in historical perspective, and, in accordance with the findings of the research, preserved for interpretive purposes or managed for some adaptive use. For the results of the research to be of maximum use for interpreters, site managers, and cultural resource specialists, the Service has designated specific study types -- clearly defined research products -- that experience has shown provide direct usable information to those responsible for the resource. Thus historic resource studies, historic structure reports, historic base maps and grounds reports, archeological studies, curatorial studies, and historic furnishing reports (see Glossary for definitions) allow site managers and Service planners to make informed administrative decisions and interpreters to interpret the Service's cultural resources with accuracy and insight.

This cultural resource management bibliography was conceived out of a critical need to bring together under one cover all relevant report titles bearing on cultural resources in the North Atlantic Region of the National Park Service. During the past half-century many reports were misplaced, poorly filed, sometimes lost, and on occasion completely forgotten about. Individual park sites had no way of knowing what reports existed in regional office libraries, and neither parks nor regional offices knew what reports were listed in the Washington cultural resource library. Although bibliographies have been prepared using titles on file in Washington, no effort was made to make them comprehensive. The National Park Service in the Northeast: A Cultural Resource Management Bibliography attempts to not only identify all cultural resource research reports prepared by and for the National Park Service, but also, by using a location code, indicate where copies of reports are located.

USING THE BIBLIOGRAPHY

Designed to be of use by site managers, interpreters, and researchers, the bibliography is arranged alphabetically by park, and within each park, by structure or site. General reports and studies for structures without a List of Classified Structures (LCS) number (a unique number assigned by the Washington office for all historic structures) are listed at the front of each section. Building and site specific reports are then listed in order according to LCS number. To make the bibliography as comprehensive as possible, dissertations, theses, journal articles, and other non-NPS generated publications have been incorporated when they deal specifically with the resources of a park site. In those instances, pertinent publication information is provided within brackets following the title.

Occasionally, if it deals with two structures, a report will be listed twice. Carole Perrault's "Exterior Finishes Study: With Recommendations for Repainting the Adams Birthplaces," for example, is listed under the John Adams Birthplace (1710.21036) and the John Quincy Adams Birthplace (1710.21035). Reports dealing with more than two structures such as surveys or historic resource studies are considered general reports.

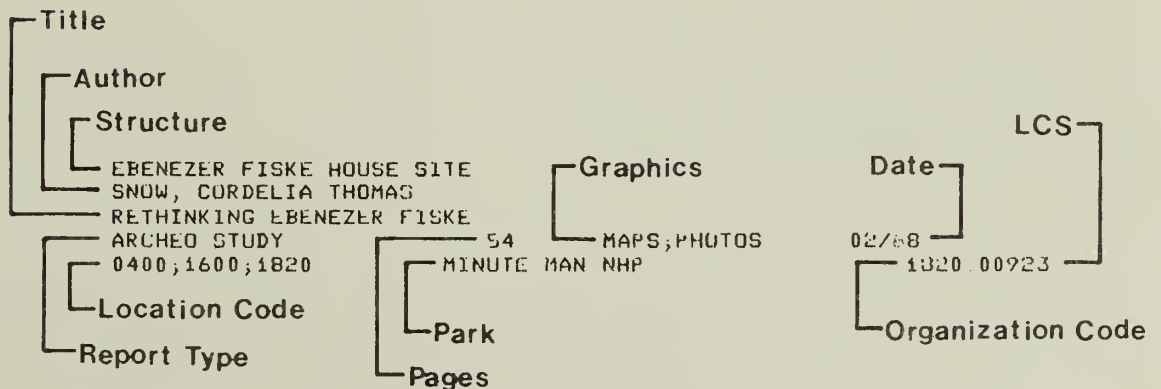

Standard National Park Service organization codes have been used to indicate the location of reports and, along with the LCS number, to establish an arrangement by structure. Because the List of Classified Structures is not complete for the Charlestown Navy Yard, reports for that site are not listed by structure. To ensure that studies on each of the eight sites remained together, however, artificial organization codes were used for Boston National Historical Park.

Each entry contains the following categories, or fields, of information.

1. Author
2. Title
3. Date of publication
4. Number of pages
5. Nature of graphic material used
6. Type of report
7. Name of park
8. Name of structure
9. Organization code: a combination of a four digit number used Servicewide to identify park units, and a five digit number to identify structures included in the Service's List of Classified Structures (LCS)
10. Location of copies: indicated by the first four digits of the organization code

The sample entry below illustrates the location of each data field.

The bibliography is maintained on a Hewlett-Packard 9845C micro-computer in the North Atlantic Regional Office in Boston, Massachusetts. Future cultural resource reports will be added so that it will continue to provide current bibliographical information on the 38 park sites within the region.

GLOSSARY

GLOSSARY

A major advantage of maintaining a bibliography on a computer is the ability to compile special or sub-lists of titles based on structure, author, or report type. Lists based on report type allow resource managers and cultural resource specialists to pull together reports of a particular kind, e.g., archeological reports or historic structure reports, for a specific site or structure. The following 17 report types represent broad categories of reports most often needed for management and research purposes. If the report type is abbreviated in the bibliographic entry, the abbreviation is noted in parentheses following the title.

Administrative History (Admin Hist): Administrative histories contain the history of a park as an institutional entity. They discuss the creation of the park and the administration of it since coming under National Park Service control.

Archeological Study (Archeo Study): Archeological studies include excavation reports, artifact analyses and evaluations, and resource assessments.

Collection Management Plans (Coll Mgmt Plan): These plans detail the manner in which a park object collection will be stored, conserved, protected, and used for study or interpretive purposes.

Collections Inventory: Collections inventories list with brief descriptions the contents of a collection, structure, or park.

Completion Report (Comp Report): Completion reports are prepared at the conclusion of a preservation, restoration, or other special project to record work actually done.

Cultural Resource Base Map (Base Map): Base maps identify, in graphic and textual form, the historic, prehistoric, and/or contemporary resources of a site.

Historic Furnishing Report (HFR): Historic furnishing reports document the arrangement and extent of historic furnishings, and, when appropriate, direct the accurate refurnishing of a historic structure to reflect the period of significance.

Historic Grounds Report: Historic grounds reports document the appearance of a historic scene during one or more historic periods. The report concentrates on historic more historic periods. The report concentrates on historic vegetation patterns, roads, fences, fields, pastures, and other landscape elements.

Historic Structure Report (HSR-Admin, Hist, Archit, Archeo, Engin): Historic structure reports are detailed studies of individual buildings. Used to establish the significance, condition, and treatment of structures, HSRs can have administrative, historical, architectural, archeological, or engineering components.

Historic Resource Study: A historic resource study is a general history report that evaluates the cultural resources of a site and places them in historical context. It often provides background information regarding the event or association for which the site is significant.

Maintenance Guide (Maint Guide): Cultural resource maintenance guides offer advice and recommendations for the day-to-day and cyclical preservation needs of a structure.

Miscellaneous (Misc): Miscellaneous reports include bibliographies, collections of primary source materials, guides to collections, and transcripts of original documents.

New Area Study: New area studies are prepared prior to National Park Service acquisition of a site and are designed to provide a basis for deciding whether a particular site possesses the significance and integrity to be incorporated into the National Park System.

Research Plan: Research plans evaluate the research needs of a park and suggest areas or topics requiring additional research.

Special Curatorial Study: These reports include conservation reports, evaluations of artifact collections, and other reports relating to object and archeological artifact collections.

Special History Study: Special history studies focus on the associations, events, and historic personalities of a park rather than on its cultural resources. They are used by resource managers and interpreters.

Surveys: Cultural resource inventories are of two kinds: architectural and archeological. They include the location, description, and, to a degree, the significance of park resources.
