ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The production of this report was a truly collaborative effort. Shelley Kaplan researched and wrote the historical data sections on the provost marshal's office. Pat Craig researched and wrote the history of Building 34/35, and located the illustration of James Taylor's room. Pat also conducted some general research on dry goods stores and collected dry goods inventories from Jefferson County. Carol Petravage continued the research on dry goods stores, collected inventories from Loudoun County, wrote the furnishings plans for both structures, the Taylor exhibit, and the Officer's Quarters, and compiled the final report. Bill Brown reviewed the furnishings plan for the provost marshal's office and suggested improvements to the Taylor exhibit. Kam Sloan and Karen Matson edited the document for publication, and Brenda Hooper assisted with inventory transcription.

The indexing of information in Jefferson County census and property records and newspapers continues to be a tremendous resource during the preparation of the Harpers Ferry furnishings reports. Pat Chickering, Stan Bumgardner, and Mike Jenkins have provided the Division of Historic Furnishings with countless leads and valuable advice, as well as sharing the results of their extensive research. The authors of this volume thank them for their continued support.

ADMINISTRATIVE DATA

LOCATION AND PROPOSED USE

Harpers Ferry National Historical Park, originally called Harpers Ferry National Monument, was established by Congress in 1944 to be "a public memorial commemorating historical events at or near Harpers Ferry" (Public Law 386). According to the Interpretive Prospectus, approved in 1980, two of the major themes to be interpreted in the lower town are the Civil War and industrial history.

Building 34 is located on the south side of Shenandoah Street in lower town Harpers Ferry. In 1973, Harpers Ferry NHP furnished Building 34 as a living history civil war recruiting office, representing a function which existed in Building 35 prior to the war.<sup>1</sup> The Interpretive Prospectus states that "building 34, now furnished as a recruiting office, will instead be converted to a provost marshal's office of the war era. This officer would have served as liaison with the remaining civilian population and performed military police duties. Furnishings would have been sparse and plain, very similar to the current furnishings. The objective is to change the emphasis from recruiting to Harpers Ferry as an occupied town."<sup>2</sup> Harpers Ferry NHP staff replaced the recruiting office exhibit in 1982 with a provost marshal's office exhibit.<sup>3</sup> The front room represents a provost marshal's office, with the back room as a temporary detainment space for prisoners.<sup>4</sup> When the site is staffed, usually by costumed interpreters, the visitor is allowed to enter the building. At other times, interpretive panels are placed in the doorway and the entrance is chained.

<sup>3</sup> Although a card for each object installed in the room exists in the park files, no historic furnishings report was completed. The furnishing was based on a general knowledge of provost marshals and military interiors; further research was limited by the expediency required for furnishing. Bill Brown, Staff Curator, Historic Furnishings, Harpers Ferry Center, July 16, 1990.

<sup>4</sup> Research into the Harpers Ferry provost operations has revealed no evidence that prisoners were kept in the provost marshal's office. The only evidence for non-staff sleeping in the office was the instance of two confederate deserters and their wives; the Moulton description of the event, along with other descriptions of treatment of confederate deserters after Lincoln's offer of amnesty to such soldiers argues that these visitors would not have been treated as prisoners. Charles Moulton to Fannie Moulton, December 20, 1863; to Frank Moulton, December 27, 1863, typescripts of original letters prepared by Lee and Karen Drickamer on deposit at HFNHP.

Officially, the office is interpreted to the 1863-65 period, although documents from throughout the war are posted there. Since the last refurnishing, new documentation--primarily the Charles Moulton material--has become available which, combined with comparative research, will provide a more accurate furnishings plan and fuller interpretation. This Furnishings Report provides the historical documentation and recommends the changes necessary to accurately portray a Civil War era provost marshal's office. This furnished building will help to interpret the military presence that influenced so much of civilian life in Harpers Ferry during the Civil War.

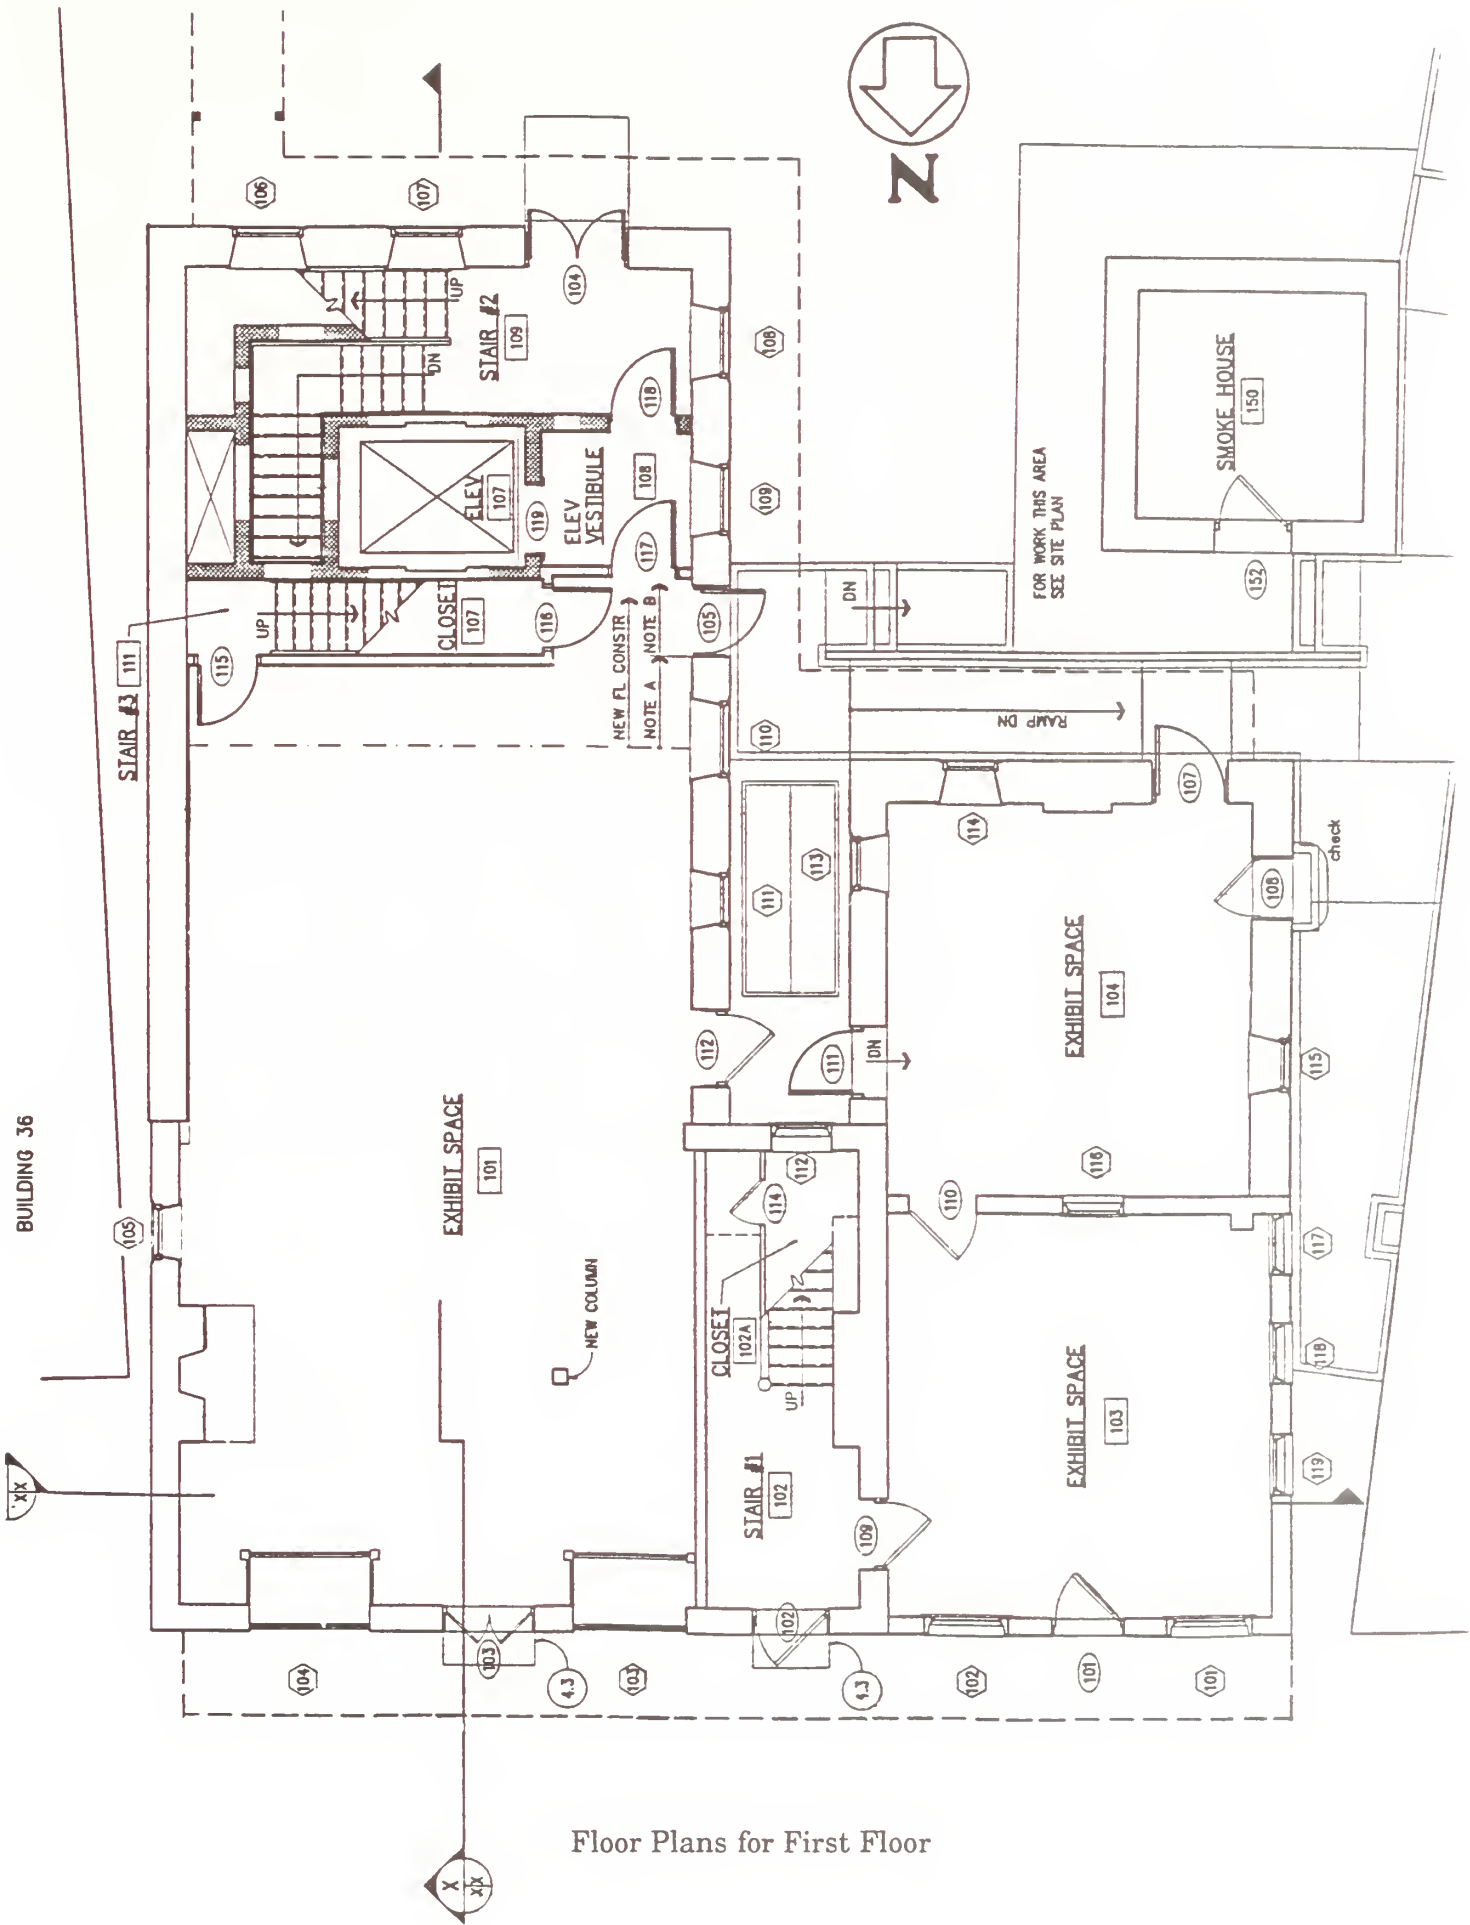

Building 35 also stands on the south side of Shenandoah Street and shares the eastern wall of Building 34. The Interpretive Prospectus recommends that this structure continue to be interpreted as a general store, since "the general store merchandise will relate to the type of clientele in this 'government town' and to the types of transportation that would have brought it here: canal and railroad."<sup>5</sup> This Furnishings Report examines the role of dry goods and general merchandise stores in the Harpers Ferry/Bolivar area during the mid-nineteenth century, and ties the furnishings of the front room in this building to the inventory of a specific general store. The rear wall of this front room will be moved towards the rear of the building to its historic location. The rear portion of Building 35, currently interpreted as a storeroom, will be used for a newly constructed elevator and fire stair.

In the course of researching these buildings, researchers identified an illustration of a bedroom on the top floor of Building 35, drawn in 1864 by the occupant, James Taylor, a war correspondent boarding in the house. Illustrations of Harpers Ferry Civil War interiors are quite rare, and park staff and researchers agreed that installing a furnished exhibit on the second floor of Building 35 showing Taylor's room would increase visitors' understanding of the effect of the war on the town and the role of war correspondents in visually bringing the war home to people living far from the front.

A furnished exhibit portraying a Civil War officer's quarters will occupy the large front room on the second floor of Building 34. The two areas to be furnished are connected by a small, inner room which will house interpretive exhibits. These exhibits, together with the James Taylor room and the Civil War officer's quarters, will convey to visitors the boarding house character of the upper floors of this building during the Civil War.

INTRODUCTION

Historic furnishings planning for Harpers Ferry National Historical Park provides a variety of challenges because of the complex physical and cultural resources encompassed by the historic district of the lower town. The unique problems faced in the planning process for Building 34/35 required frequent consultation with park staff and planning documents to assure that we were effectively meeting the stated objectives for the park.

The Interpretive Prospectus cites four major themes for interpretation: the John Brown raid, industrial history, the Civil War, and black education. These themes are clearly centered in the early to mid-nineteenth century. The majority of the existing structures in the lower town were constructed or significantly altered during the late nineteenth century, leaving only fragmentary traces of the early or Civil War era town. The greatest historic furnishings challenge at Harpers Ferry NHP is reconciling the interpretive goals with historic use and the preservation needs of the physical structures located within the park.

The approach taken in this project combined research regarding historical occupancy and use of the structures with research in specified theme topics. It was decided through consultation with park and regional office staff that whenever possible, research in historical occupancy and use would serve as the foundation for the planning of historic interiors. In those structures where the chronology of use did not further park interpretive themes, historic interiors would be furnished based upon room functions researched and documented to other structures whose historic uses were more pertinent to the designated themes.

Historical occupancy and use for the project structures was determined through an analysis of available primary documents and existing research reports. New evidence obtained from primary documents previously unavailable was incorporated into the historical data section.

In 1982, park staff informally installed a provost marshal's office in Building 34 after perceiving the need for an exhibit that would interpret to the visitor the impact of the military presence in Harpers Ferry during the Civil War. Visitors have responded favorably to the interpretation presented in this historically furnished interior. The original location of the provost marshal's office is a privately owned commercial building on High Street that is unavailable for use by the park. Therefore, regional, park, and historic furnishings staff determined that the continued use of Building 34 as a historically furnished provost marshal's office addressed critical interpretive themes in the most heavily visited corridor of the park.

Building 35 existed during the Civil War but was radically altered both inside and out during the late nineteenth century. Historical research indicates that Mrs. Cornelia Stipes operated a boarding house in Building 35 for all or part of the Civil War period. In an effort to interpret industrial history as well as trade and transportation issues, the park installed a general merchandise or dry goods store on the first floor of Building 35 in 1973. This furnished interior enables the park to interpret changes in consumer goods that occurred during the 1850s because of the rise of industrialization and improvements in transportation networks. Park staff feel that devoting the entire structure to the interpretation of a boarding house would deprive them of a particularly effective interpretive tool; therefore, regional, park, and historic furnishings staff determined that continuing to interpret the first floor of Building 35 as a general merchandise store best served the interpretive goals as stated in the Interpretive Prospectus. The rear room, currently interpreted as a storeroom, will be used for an elevator and fire stair.

However, recent research has identified pictorial documentation for one of the rooms in Building 35 during its use as a boarding house during the Civil War. Park interpretive staff are excited at the prospect of interpreting this part of the building's history as well. Therefore, the historic furnishings plan provides for the second floor room in the northeast corner of Building 35 to be interpreted as the room of James Taylor. Taylor, a newspaper correspondent and artist, included in his sketchbook a drawing of the room in Building 35 where he stayed during the Civil War. Since research indicates that Civil War officers also lived in the upstairs rooms, the second floor room in the front of Building 34 will be historically furnished as an officer's quarters.

Because the past, present, and proposed uses of Building 34/35 are so complex, this historic furnishings report is organized as follows. The following chapter summarizes the architectural history and discusses in greater detail the social history of Building 34/35. Part I outlines the role of the provost marshal in Harpers Ferry and includes a furnishings plan for Building 34 based on evidence for provost marshal's office interiors in Harpers Ferry and elsewhere. Part II examines the role of the general merchandise or dry goods store in mid-nineteenth century Harpers Ferry and includes a furnishings plan for the front room of Building 35 based on an 1854 Loudoun County store inventory. Part III briefly describes Stipes' boarding house, including James Taylor's role as a visual reporter for Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper. It includes the evidence Taylor left behind that enables the park service to accurately reproduce his room, as well as the site specific and comparative evidence for a Civil War era officer's quarters. Part III also includes furnishings plans for both rooms.

BUILDING 34/35

ANALYSIS OF HISTORIC OCCUPANCY

Construction and Early Use (1812-1858)

In a letter dated April 4, 1812, Samuel Annin, paymaster and military storekeeper of the Harpers Ferry Armory, requested permission for his son, Joseph, to erect a small brick building on armory land for the purpose of operating an apothecary.<sup>6</sup> The secretary of war granted permission in a letter dated May 12, 1812.<sup>7</sup> The young Annin erected a two-story brick building measuring approximately 23 by 34 feet, which he used as an apothecary store and dwelling.<sup>8</sup> This building forms the core of what is known today as Building 35. After resigning from his position as paymaster in 1815, Samuel Annin moved into this building with his son.

In 1816, Annin complained that the new paymaster of the armory had granted permission to Basil Williamson, a Harpers Ferry hotel and tavern keeper, to erect a tavern house upon the same lot as himself, impacting the existing structure. The proposed new building would require Annin to remove the existing porch on the west end, which provided a covering for the steps leading down into the cellar kitchen. It would also eliminate his garden area to the west of the dwelling.<sup>9</sup> Annin proved persuasive in his arguments to the War Department as the proposed lease to Williamson was cancelled on April 21, 1816.<sup>10</sup>

Samuel Annin and his son probably left the Harpers Ferry residence by the end of 1818.<sup>11</sup> Their departure resulted in an exchange of letters between the Ordnance Department, War Department, and the armory superintendent which sought to resolve Joseph Annin's claims for compensation of the construction costs for this building. The information contained in the various letters suggests that the federal government finally re-secured its claim to the building and lot by 1821,<sup>12</sup> and began using the structure as quarters for the master armorer.

An 1821 survey of buildings at the United States Armory at Harpers Ferry describes Building 35 as "One Dwelling House, 36 by 26 feet, two stories and a cellar. Built of Brick. Estimated Value: $2,500."<sup>13</sup>

The front room on the first floor of Building 34 (room 103) was probably built between 1818 and 1827.<sup>14</sup> In 1827, a "kitchen for the Master Armorer's 20 by 22 feet, 1 story brick..." was constructed. This kitchen probably appears on an 1835 Winchester and Potomac Railroad map attached to the southwest corner of Building 34/35.<sup>15</sup> Building 34/35 was enlarged to a two-and-a-half-story building with six dormer windows in 1837.<sup>16</sup> Room 204 was probably added at this time.<sup>17</sup>

Ordnance Department receipts document the maintenance performed on the dwelling. One workman was paid for eight days work repairing, plastering, and whitewashing; the next month a carpenter was contracted to repair the flooring in the house and kitchen, constructing new window frames and shutters for the front, putting in stops, and repairing all doors and windows. He made three clothes presses. On the exterior of the property, the carpenter constructed 47 feet of paling fence base and cap and hung one gate.<sup>18</sup> The annual report of government property issued for the year July 1, 1850, to June 30, 1851, notes that

<sup>17</sup> Greek Revival door and window casings in this room clearly indicate that room 204 was added to building 34/35 many years after the first floor (room 103) was built, probably in the 1830s or 40s. the master armorer's house received two coats of patent oil paint on its exterior, and that lightning rods had been installed.<sup>19</sup> An 1854 letter from the Chief of Ordnance, Col. Henry K. Craig to Armory Superintendent W.H. Bell, ordered Bell to make "such repairs on the house recently occupied by Mr. Burton, as are necessary to fit it for the new Master Armorer..."<sup>20</sup> The condition of Building 34/35 apparently deteriorated during the mid- to late 1850s:

Major Byington stated to me while he lived in the House about 1858 or 1859, that he was fearful that it would fall in whenever he went in the upper part of it.<sup>21</sup>

The apparent lack of maintenance may have been due to the recession being experienced at the armory. A board of officers that met in Harpers Ferry in 1851 had recommended to the secretary of war that surplus land and buildings belonging to the armory be sold. The board mentioned Building 34/35 in its report as follows:

The Master Armorer and Clerks now occupy houses on ground which should be sold; these houses should be reserved from the sale until suitable ones are erected for their use. All other dwellings should be removed from the land reserved....<sup>22</sup>

The board's recommendation was approved by the secretary of war, and the arsenal yard (in which the master armorer's house was located) was subdivided, although the lots were not included in the 1852 sale of government lands. With the money raised from the sale of lots and buildings, it was proposed that new quarters be constructed for the officers of the armory.<sup>23</sup>

The secretary of war did not approve this suggestion, and construction plans were abandoned for the next four years. In 1856, however, the issue of new residences for the armory was again raised and this time approved. A joint resolution was passed by Congress in 1856 which authorized the secretary of war to apply the funds from the 1852 government sale to permanent improvements at the armory.

Consequently, planning began for the construction of three new dwellings, including a new master armorer's house, located adjacent to Building 34/35.<sup>24</sup>

The old house is on the same lot, and very near to one of its [Building 36's] gables, and is quite in a dilapidated condition. The outhouses attached to the old house, are wanted for the use of the new one; if the old house is retained, new outhouses will have to be built for the new house....Besides the materials in the old house can be very profitably employed in the construction of outhouses for the new Quarters on the Hill....I therefore recommend the pulling down of this house and the saving of the materials, as above named.<sup>25</sup>

When Samuel Byington resigned as master armorer in 1858, his replacement Benjamin Mills arranged a swap of residences with the paymaster's clerk, John E. Daingerfield, in which Daingerfield would live in Building 34/35 until the adjacent dwelling was completed.<sup>26</sup> Daingerfield moved into the new residence by July 1859.<sup>27</sup>

The Civil War Period (1859-1870)

As a direct consequence of the attack of John Brown's Raiders on the arsenal in 1859, Superintendent Barbour requested that army regulars be stationed at Harpers Ferry for protection. Troops arrived in town in November. In a letter dated November 8, 1859, from George Mauzy to James H. Burton, a former master armorer at Harpers Ferry, Mauzy states that

Your old quarters are now used as a recruiting station by Capt. Burton, there is a Co. of Soldiers, who were sent here from Govs. Island to protect Government property....<sup>28</sup>

Building 34/35 was probably used as a recruiting station until April 1860, when Captain Burton and his men withdrew from Harpers Ferry.<sup>29</sup>

The stable may have been used by a nonresident of Building 34/35 during this period. When James McGraw sold a business in 1861 to his nephew, Patrick, two of the items listed in the conveyance were a "stable & ice house near the Market House at Harper's Ferry."<sup>30</sup> Lot 3, Block B, where the stable associated with the master armorer's dwelling is located, is directly in front of the market house lot, and therefore may be the stable referred to in the deed.

Other documented uses of Building 34/35 reflect civilian use and occurred during the last years of the war. The journal entries of James E. Taylor, a war correspondent traveling with the Sheridan campaign through the Shenandoah Valley in 1864, indicate that Mrs. Cornelia Stipes operated a hotel or boarding house in the structure. During the Civil War, the provost marshal granted licenses and rented vacant buildings to traders and sutlers who applied for permission to sell goods or operate businesses in Harpers Ferry. The money obtained from these rentals was given to the surgeons to benefit the sick and wounded.<sup>31</sup> When Taylor arrived in Harpers Ferry, he was led to a hotel by a young boy and introduced to Mrs. Stipes, the proprietress. Taylor explains that

Mrs. Stipes catered to sojourners at the Ferry to the extent of table board and lodging, not from choice but necessity caused by her husband's business reverses owing to the War, and his inability to catch on again, when it fell to the lot of Madam to entertain transients to keep the wolf from the door.<sup>32</sup>

Taylor goes on to describe his room at the hotel:

I am at once conducted to my quarters, a sky parlor under the slanting roof, the only available room unoccupied, but make no 'kick,' thankful at being supplied at all, considering the demand at this time by correspondents, army contractors, and sutlers for lodgings.<sup>33</sup>

Taylor later remarks upon how uncomfortable his lodgings are during warm weather:

According to Taylor, the dining room for hotel guests was located on a lower floor. Next door to the hotel stood the master armorer's house (Building 36), which served as army headquarters and was occupied by Brig. Gen. John D. Stevenson.<sup>35</sup> Building 34/35 also apparently had a porch, since Taylor mentions holding a conversation with two other journalists on one.<sup>36</sup> Although Taylor does not pinpoint the location of this porch in his journal entry, his sketch of Shenandoah Street shows Stipes' boarding house with a small front portico.<sup>37</sup> He also reports leaving his horse in the stable associated with Stipes' boarding house.<sup>38</sup>

When Brig. Gen. Edward D. Ramsay inspected the buildings and stores at Harpers Ferry in 1865, he described Building 34/35 as follows:

Dwelling House No. 2 -- two story, brick, located on Shenandoah Street. In fair condition and occupied as quarters for Officers.<sup>39</sup>

Mrs. Stipes purchased property two blocks away on Shenandoah Street in April 1865 and may have moved out of Building 35 at that time.<sup>40</sup>

Mrs. Annie Kirby may have lived in Building 34/35 in the late 1860s. In 1878, the current owners of the building, the minor children of James McGraw, stated that "Mrs. Kirby occupied the property until the Spring of 1870, and since that time we have occupied it with the exception of five or six months."<sup>41</sup> Mrs. Kirby is listed

The history of occupancy for this building reflects the transience of people in Harpers Ferry during the Civil War, and the lack of legal and government documents can perhaps be explained by the upheaval in business and social matters caused by the war.

The McGraw Years (1870-1898)

Building 34/35 was among the lots and structures included in the 1869 sale of government properties. The building, located on Lot 3, Block B, was purchased by Margaret T., Catherine A., and James C. McGraw, the children of James McGraw, for $5,100.<sup>43</sup> The family was probably in residence in Building 34/35 by June 1870. James McGraw immediately began making improvements upon the property.

Most of the information about McGraw's early years in Building 34/35 comes from the records of price abatement hearings held in 1878. Terrible floods in 1870 and 1877 ruined the hopes of many property owners for revitalizing Harpers Ferry after the demise of the armory. Additionally, many lower town lots failed to be developed because Capt. F.C. Adams, the major purchaser of government property at the 1869 sale, became involved in various chancery cases and in a right of way dispute with the B&O Railroad in the 1870s.<sup>44</sup> Consequently, those who paid the inflated prices for government property at the sale in 1869 appealed to the government for relief based on the current depressed economic conditions in Harpers Ferry in the 1870s. McGraw submitted vouchers and an itemized list of his expenditures on the property, dating from 1870. Most of his costs in the early part of this decade dealt with repairs or modifications to the already existing structures, but some indicate adaptations to accommodate the needs of his business.<sup>45</sup>

Building 34/35 suffered extensive damage in the September 1870 flood shortly after McGraw took up residence. In his testimony on behalf of McGraw and his children in their abatement petition, Jesse W. Graham described the condition of the lot and buildings prior to McGraw's improvements:

[there was] no pavement in front of the Building or shade Trees, both ends and one side wall badly cracked, a badly broken Slate Roof that would make the House untenable. Floors sunken, and without the brick pillars put in by Mr. McGraw to support the floors, it would have fallen in long ago. There was no outbuildings except a small and badly damaged one story kitchen, without floors or windows...had Mr. McGraw not put in about $1600 worth of repairs, the House would have fallen in long ago....The repairs Mr. McGraw put on the House alone, as above stated, and two thousand dollars worth of new out buildings and fencing, makes the property look quite valuable, but in its exposed condition from the floods, and from its liability to be bodily swept away, as the fencing & outbuildings & coal and other goods were either damaged or entirely swept [sic] away from this property in 1870 and 1877, few people would care to pay more for the property than the amount I have named and take the risk of losing so heavily. Mr. McGraw has had a large portion of the House replastered this summer, and built a new Corn House and large ware room for coal, goods & c in the yard besides...the true value of the Building at the time of the purchase was the value of the material in it, it being condemned by the United States as unfit for use [sic].<sup>46</sup>

Jesse Graham's reference to the coal and other goods that were swept away by floods suggests that McGraw had transferred his grocery and hardware business from its previous location on the north side of Shenandoah Street. Since it does not differentiate between the damage done by the 1870 and 1877 floods, Graham's statement alone cannot confirm that the McGraw business was operating on the Building 34/35 site during the early 1870s.

While the location of his store in the early 1870s is still unclear, there is no doubt that his business was already well established. The earliest advertisement found for James McGraw dates from 1857 and notes the relocation of his grocery and liquor business from High Street to the storeroom previously rented by Israel Russell (probably building 43).<sup>47</sup> McGraw apparently ran into financial problems since he sold his merchandise to his nephew Patrick McGraw on January 14, 1861, and on January 17 conveyed his personal property in a trust to George N. Lynch to secure payments owed to a list of creditors (see Appendix A).<sup>48</sup> The inventory of items sold to his nephew indicates that McGraw sold liquor and groceries and suggests that he operated a livery as well, since a number of vehicles and horses are listed.<sup>49</sup>

In November 1865, James McGraw advertised in the local press that he had erected a "large & commodious stable. [With] Horses & vehicles for hire."<sup>50</sup> It is unknown where this stable was built although one possible location was Wager Lot 48, which McGraw bought from Noah and Sarah Ann Swayne in August 1865.<sup>51</sup> Alternately, McGraw may have built his livery on armory land across the street (Lot 3, Block B), since there is evidence that he was associated with the old stable belonging to Building 34/35. To date, no archeological evidence has been found to support a second stable on the lot.<sup>52</sup> McGraw may have rented the outbuildings on Lot 3, Block B, prior to his purchase of the property in 1869.<sup>53</sup>

McGraw's claim against the United States quartermaster and commissary stores for $3,675.99 worth of merchandise and services taken during the war years indicates that he stayed in business during the war.<sup>54</sup> Some of this claim undoubtedly derived from his livery business, since horses were in great demand throughout the war years.<sup>55</sup> McGraw's livery business is also mentioned in two court cases.<sup>56</sup>

After the war, McGraw's emphasis seemed to shift away from the livery trade. His purchase of the stock of liquor and other merchandise in the saloon of his nephew, Patrick McGraw, in the autumn of 1866 indicates that the liquor trade remained an important part of his business.<sup>57</sup> In the late 1860s and early 1870s, <sup>56</sup> See Debt Appeal, 1866, James McGraw vs. Thomas A. Kirwan, Circuit Court, JCC. An overview of the depositions suggests that Kirwan frequently hired horses and buggies from McGraw. Average cost of keeping a horse at McGraw's stable was $0.75/day. Rental of a horse or buggy was $3/day or $5/day for both. See also Debt Appeal, James McGraw vs. Joseph Myers, September 22, 1873, Circuit Court, JCC.

McGraw's newspaper advertisements emphasize groceries, liquor, and coal. As McGraw's business affairs prospered, he invested a portion of the money he earned into improvements on the Lot 3, Block B, property. In the early 1870s, he made repairs on the sewer and cistern in the rear yard and he installed a pump. He also repaired the roof, gutters, downspouts, and missing window panes; on the interior he re-plastered.<sup>58</sup>

McGraw also rebuilt the old stable on the property. In his abatement claim he submitted an itemized list of costs incurred that included an entry for removing a stable from off the road.<sup>59</sup> This entry probably refers to the damage caused by the 1870 flood which swept most of the outbuildings off the property. Apparently the framed portion of the structure settled down in Market Street, requiring its removal by McGraw.

Seven years after the 1870 flood, McGraw spent $600 to build an ice, carriage and coal house, probably on the foundations of the old stable. During investigations conducted around Building 32, archeologists uncovered an 1866 penny in a builders' trench, supporting a construction date of at least 1866. The archeologists concluded that the bottom 2.7 ft...of the foundation probably related to an earlier building. In 1877, McGraw built his 'Ice/Carriage/Coal' house, probably accounting for the coarse building layer above the finely finished foundation he reused.<sup>60</sup>

The measurements of the currently existing structure are approximately the same as those of the old stable.<sup>61</sup> A photograph from 1892-95 shows a two-story shed off the main structure at the back of the lot that was clearly used for the storage of coal or other goods directly unloaded from rail cars.<sup>62</sup>

During the abatement proceedings, Jesse Graham testified that McGraw also spent $2,000 on constructing new outbuildings and fencing, including a corn house and ware room for coal and other goods.<sup>63</sup> A later deed refers to a series of sheds located along the back boundary of the property.<sup>64</sup>

As the decade progressed, McGraw continued to expand his business, increasing the scope and volume of his coal and hardware lines. A September 1878 announcement stated that he had recently received 120 tons of cargo in his yard from the canal boat, McFannon.<sup>65</sup> He notified the public only two months later of shipments of 200 tons of coal, 100 kegs of nails, and 50 kegs of horse and mule shoes, among other items.<sup>66</sup>

With the growth of his coal business, McGraw apparently took steps to insure his investment. In 1881, R.A. Alexander, an agent for the Aetna Insurance Company, reimbursed McGraw $100 for a fire in his coal yard.<sup>67</sup> The coal portion of his business continued to increase and ads appeared which listed deliveries of 1,000 tons in his yard. McGraw was also the successful bidder in 1885 for a contract to supply coal for the Jefferson County free schools.<sup>68</sup>

Meanwhile, the abatement claims process dragged on. In February 1880, the abatement claim was finally approved, lowering the original purchase price to $1,200, although the lot remained unpaid until December 1882. The children transferred title to their father on December 4, 1882, but it wasn't until November 8, 1883, that the deed was finally recorded.<sup>69</sup>

In May 1882, the Virginia Free Press noted that James McGraw had a "large [house] in course of construction."<sup>70</sup> Later that year, the Spirit of Jefferson published this account of McGraw's new residence (Building 33):

It is a massive stone structure, about 36 x 57 feet in size, three stories and an attic in height, covered with slate, and with an attractive brown sandstone finish. On the first floor is a spacious store-room and a large hallway, on the second and third six rooms each for dwelling purposes, and on the attic floor, four rooms.<sup>71</sup>

By late 1883 or early 1884, James McGraw had moved his business into the new store room in Building 33, and the McGraw family had moved into their new residence on the upper floors.

McGraw rented out his former residence and store, but the information regarding the new occupants is sketchy. A close examination of the 1880 census suggests that a hat and bonnet-maker, Frances McDonnell, and her sister Annie, may have been living in the building at that time. The post office was probably moved from Building 36 to Building 34/35 in 1887.<sup>72</sup> Finally, John Koonce may have occupied the building as well, since beginning in September 1887, he regularly advertised his services as a rental agent, rent collector and a notary, located in the office over the post office.<sup>73</sup>

In April 1888, the Spirit of Jefferson announced that

Mr. James McGraw is fitting up his former residence in Shenandoah street for a store room, which will be occupied after the 15th of this month by M. Cohen & Co., clothiers.<sup>74</sup>

Cohen's store may have been located in Building 34 since the post office had moved from Building 36 into Building 35 in 1887.<sup>75</sup> Evidence does not indicate whether the post office shared its space with another business.

In the late 1880s, McGraw directed much of his energy towards his new business venture, a beer bottling operation, housed in a new two-story building. This structure, with its stone foundation and first story, and a framed second story, was built directly behind his residence in Building 33.<sup>76</sup>

Later references to the Post Office clearly locate it in building 34/35. See Spirit of Jefferson, July 28, 1891, p. 3, col. 2.

<sup>75</sup> Interpretation of the location of these two functions hinges upon a reference in the Spirit of Jefferson, July 28, 1891, p. 3, col. 1. The news item comments on the anticipated move of the post office from its present location to a "room west of it, newly fitted for that purpose." This would seem to imply that prior to 1891, the post office was located in the eastern half of building 34/35, that is, building 35.

By July 1891, McGraw had raised Building 34/35 to three stories and added the stuccoed wings in the rear.<sup>77</sup> The newly renovated interior contained a large store room plus 30 large rooms intended for a hotel or boarding house. The post office, which was probably located in Building 35, was scheduled to move into a "room west of it, newly fitted for the purpose."<sup>78</sup> The rooms were painted by William Davis by mid-May 1892. The Spirit of Jefferson reported that there were "28 rooms besides the post office and store; 57 doors elegantly grained in walnut and other items to correspond."<sup>79</sup> This description closely matches the current configuration of these buildings.

McGraw may have added a series of balconies along the rear second story of Building 34/35 at this time. Although no balconies are indicated on the Sanborn map of 1894, a photograph of Harpers Ferry taken from Loudoun Heights around 1895 clearly shows the balconies.<sup>80</sup> McGraw may have added the balconies between the time that the insurance survey and photograph were taken.

Meanwhile, McGraw continued to prosper in his business ventures. His son, James C., joined him in the business, taking a particular interest in the beverage bottling and retailing aspects, and in 1890 James McGraw announced that his son was taking over the business from him.<sup>81</sup>

Building 33A was built in the summer of 1888 to serve as a bottling plant.<sup>82</sup> Building 32 may have been used in the operation as well, as its deep stone foundations would have provided a cool storage area. Building 32 was certainly part of the bottling operation by 1894, since the Sanborn fire insurance map for that year includes the building as part of the beverage bottling operation.<sup>83</sup>

Within three years of relinquishing his position as head of the bottling business, James McGraw died. James C. McGraw, acting as the administrator of the senior McGraw's estate, estimated its value at $155,000.<sup>84</sup>

James C. McGraw concentrated his efforts on the beer and beverage bottling operation. By March 1895, he announced plans to build a large brewery on Block C, alongside the Shenandoah River and across from the market house block.<sup>85</sup> McGraw continued to operate the hardware business out of Building 33, and rented a portion of Building 34/35 to I.V. Pentz for use as a general store.<sup>86</sup>

The brewery enterprise apparently stretched the financial limits of James C. McGraw, for on October 1, 1897, he and his surviving sister, Catherine A., assigned all of their property to the family attorney, James M. Mason, Jr. The trust deed describes the McGraw holdings:

Said lot is improved by two large stone and brick buildings, the one of which is used by said James C. and Katie A. McGraw as their residence [Building 33] as well as the store rooms of said J.C. McGraw, the other of which contains two large store rooms on the lower floor [Building 34/35], each building being three and a half stories in height, and other buildings.<sup>87</sup>

A public auction of the McGraw holdings and personal household goods was held on December 23, 1897, to satisfy the debts to their creditors. The contents of their hardware business were sold on February 10, 1898 (see Appendix A).<sup>88</sup>

James and Katie did not stay in town to watch the sale of their home and possessions, having left Harpers Ferry before the news of the assignment of their property and possessions was made public. They hoped by doing so "to avoid the mortification of witnessing the excitement caused by their unexpected assignment."<sup>89</sup>

Their bankruptcy resulted in numerous chancery suits in the Jefferson County court. The suits were consolidated and a final decree involving the cases was entered on February 24, 1899.<sup>90</sup> The decree confirmed the earlier 1898 sale by the trustees of that portion of Lot 3 on which buildings 33, 33A, and 32, were situated. J. Perry Haddox, Joseph H. Savage and his brother, Ralph, all of Winchester, Virginia, purchased the property for $4,000 and were further granted:

Haddox and the Savage brothers also purchased the brewery property for their Belvidere Brewing Company and used these buildings in conjunction with that business.<sup>92</sup>

The trustees continued to rent out space in the various buildings and outbuildings while the legal issues were being resolved. In October 1897, the post office moved from the McGraw building, probably Building 34/35, to the Ames Building, opposite the Hotel Conner.<sup>93</sup> Seven months later, the rear wing of the McGraw residence (Building 33A) was leased to August and Laura Krueger, and Henry and Eva Schafer.<sup>94</sup> Within Building 34/35, the Pentz store continued operation under the management of Ira C. Allstadt. Allstadt, his mother, and his siblings probably lived on the upper floors or in the rear wing of the building.<sup>95</sup> Allstadt remained in business there until at least December 1902, when he announced plans to relocate.<sup>96</sup> The rest of the family may have continued to live in Building 34/35, however, since a 1905 wedding notice states that his sister, Cassie, was married to E.M. Elder at the home of the bride's mother on Shenandoah Street.<sup>97</sup>

The Doran Years (1899-1953)

William Doran purchased the McGraw post office building (Building 34/35 portion of Lot 3, Block B), for $4,775 in early 1899,<sup>98</sup> and probably moved into the building with his sister Mary Ellen (known as Ella), and their widow mother, Sarah.<sup>99</sup> Another possible resident of either Building 34/35 or 33 is the editor of the Harpers Ferry Sentinel, who moved down from the Camp Hill area.<sup>100</sup>

Evidence does not indicate exactly when the Dorans opened their store. In 1902, a general store (presumably the Pentz operation) was still located in Building 35. A variety store had replaced the post office in Building 34 and may have been operated by the Doran family, or they may have rented that location to another merchant. If the latter were true, the Doran business may have been located in the old McGraw hardware building (Building 33), which housed another general store in 1902.<sup>101</sup>

Because of financial difficulties, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Savage and Mr. and Mrs. J.P. Haddox, the owners of buildings 33, 33A and 32, sold their holdings and interests in Lot 3, Block B, to Mary Ellen Doran in 1907 and closed their beverage and bottling business.<sup>102</sup>

A pool hall on the lower floor and a restaurant on the upper floor replaced the general store in Building 33 between 1902 and 1907. The Doran business operated out of the entire bottom floor of Building 34/35.<sup>103</sup> A furniture store replaced the pool hall and restaurant in Building 33 sometime between 1907 and 1912.<sup>104</sup>

"McGraw's house" could refer to any of a number of properties owned by the McGraws including buildings 34/35, building 33, or a building located on Wager Lot 26. The McGraw in question may be John McGraw, unrelated to the McGraws of buildings 32 through 35 altogether.

The Spirit of Jefferson reported on September 19, 1911, p. 3, col. 4, that Sarah and William Doran had built a large elevator in the rear of the McGraw property, which they had converted into apartments. The paper further noted that the Dorans' furniture business was housed on the lower floor.

The Farmers Advocate reported in 1919 that W. & S.L. Doran sold their entire stock and fixtures to the Pennsylvania Underselling Company.<sup>105</sup> However, a year later the same newspaper commented that William and his sister had restocked their store after the sale and reversed their departments "so that the finer goods are now sold in the lower room of the McGraw property."<sup>106</sup>

William Doran died in November 1925.<sup>107</sup> Probably because William died intestate, his sister announced a going-out-of-business sale in February 1926. The stock was sold at one-third its value to the Viener Brothers, and Goodman Sales System of Baltimore disposed of the stock.<sup>108</sup> That same year, a bakery began operating out of Building 34/35. The bakery had a pastry and cake department, marketing a brand of items under the "Martha Washington" label.<sup>109</sup> Later that year, a dentist, Dr. Charles Hutchinson, opened an office in the Doran building, although it is not clear whether his office was located in Building 34/35, 33, or 45.<sup>110</sup> Mary Ellen Doran, together with her niece Mary Cecilia Doran, resumed the dry goods business by late 1927.<sup>111</sup>

The bakery operation proved unsuccessful, and on February 9, 1928, the local newspaper reported that Eugene Bready, the sole owner of the Jefferson Baking Company, had signed a deed of trust turning over the business to his attorney, F.A. Brown. Only two months later Commissioner Briscoe asked to receive proof of the debts against Bready and the Jefferson Baking Company. Public sale of the business and equipment was held the following month in front of Building 34/35.<sup>112</sup>

Charles T. Smith purchased the bakery on June 27, 1928. The new owner held a contest to select a trade name for the baked goods. The winning entry was submitted by Mrs. M. Naill of Harpers Ferry. Her suggested trade name was "Marvel," and the new loaf of bread was to be called, "Smith's Honest Loaf."<sup>113</sup>

The business must have prospered for in 1929, Smith moved the bakery from Building 34/35 into the former Presbyterian Church located on Shenandoah Street.<sup>114</sup>

Little other evidence exists for occupants or uses of Building 34/35 from the late 1920s until 1952, when the State of West Virginia purchased Lot 3, Block B. In a personal interview with Mrs. Mary Cavalier Dalgarn and her brother, Frank Cavalier, both of Bolivar, West Virginia, Mr. Cavalier remarked that he had made milk deliveries in the 1930s to Mrs. Bell, who lived upstairs over the Doran stores. He also remembered that Mr. Baumgardner boarded in Building 34/35 when he owned the bakery in the Presbyterian Church building (1934-39?).<sup>115</sup> Mr. Cavalier also remembered that Josephine and John DeLauder lived in Building 34/35, probably early in their marriage. Josephine DeLauder was the daughter of William Doran and the niece of Mary Ellen Doran.

In 1947, the Doran property was split between the heirs, with William Doran, the son of William and Mary Elizabeth Doran, receiving the portion of the property containing buildings 30, 31, 34, 34A, and 35; and his sister, Mary Cecilia Doran receiving the rest of the property.<sup>116</sup> In 1952, William Doran and his mother Mary Elizabeth (who had retained a dower interest in the property) conveyed Building 34/35 to the state of West Virginia.<sup>117</sup> Within the next year the State of West Virginia turned over these properties to the National Park Service, and they were incorporated into Harpers Ferry National Monument.

In 1943, the Sunday Sun, a Baltimore newspaper, painted a vivid picture of Harpers Ferry's decaying economy:

Along Shenandoah Street, from the Railroad to Herr's Island once lined with substantial stores, hotels and homes, but six houses are occupied, two of these being stores. The hotels are gone, the brick and stone business houses are empty and desolate, the dwellings are in ruins.<sup>118</sup>

It is not presently known when the Baumgardner bakery closed, although it may have ceased operation after being damaged in the 1936 floods. On the other hand, Jefferson County property records note that Baumgardner was delinquent on his taxes for the years 1939-1945 (Deed Book 189, p. 56, JCC), so the bakery may not have closed until 1939.

The rapidly changing history of buildings 32, 33, and 34/35 during the twentieth century illustrates the fact that, despite abundant power and excellent transportation systems, Harpers Ferry never recovered the strong industrial economy it enjoyed during the mid-nineteenth century.

PART I

THE PROVOST MARSHAL'S OFFICE

ANALYSIS OF HISTORIC OCCUPANCY

General Duties and Organization

As the enforcer of military law, the Civil War provost marshal's responsibilities extended to both military and civilian life. The duties of his office included administering the oath of allegiance to civilians and deserters from the opposing army, regulating civil affairs, issuing passes for travel, supervising the provost guard and prisons, capturing deserters of their own army, seizing contraband and controlling the mail, supervising stragglers, regulating prices and preventing illegal liquor sales to soldiers, as well as completing the voluminous paperwork involved in all the above. Military scholar Kenneth Radley noted that "a provost system largely based on British precedent existed since the [American] Revolution, but it had been restricted to purely military functions," whereas during the Civil War its powers were extended to include authority over civilians.<sup>119</sup> The duties of Union and Confederate provost marshals were similar except for variations necessitated by the Confederate ownership of slaves, such as impressment of blacks.<sup>120</sup>

The Provost Marshal Department became a separate function under the War Office as a result of the Enrollment Act of March 3, 1863. Col. James Fry was given the title of provost marshal general. Under this act the federal government took control of recruiting away from the states,<sup>121</sup> which explains why the majority of official orders and regulations sent to provost marshals was concerned with issues of recruiting.<sup>122</sup> The recruiting function was much more important for provost marshals in states such as New York and Connecticut. In military zones and border states, the provost marshal's duties concentrated on matters of policing and security.

<sup>122</sup> Such as Regulations for the Government of the Bureau of the Provost Marshal General of the United States, (Washington: Government Printing Office, 1863) and Index to Circulars, Provost Marshal General's Office, (no publication information, 1863)

In fact, the regulations initiated from the provost marshal general's office in 1863 seemed to have little effect on those provost marshals and staff detailed for duty in military zones and enemy territory, where circumstances and prior precedent shaped action. For example, the regulations allowed the provost marshal to employ two clerks, whose duties would include acting as recorder for the board of enrollment. In military areas, the size of provost marshal office staffs varied, since they were detailed from military units as needed.<sup>123</sup>

The proper rank for a provost marshal was captain.<sup>124</sup> These officers were expected to report to state acting assistant provost marshals general under the provost marshal general of the United States, although provost marshals in military areas were responsible to their department commanders.<sup>125</sup> The actual organization was not as clear as the manual defined, as hinted in the statement by Civil War General Curtis that the "creation of the so-called provost-marshal invented a spurious military officer...Everybody appoints provost-marshals and these officers seem to exercise plenary powers." General Schofield argued that the officers were "entirely independent of all commanders except the commander of the department, and hence of necessity pretty much independent of them."<sup>126</sup> Many other officers had authority to issue passes as well, making forgeries easier and causing debates over jurisdiction.<sup>127</sup>

Despite concerns over the provost marshal's authority or purpose, the officer, his staff and guard were of vital importance in areas under martial law, such as Harpers Ferry, West Virginia. The provost marshal's office, which could be a tent in the field or a courthouse in the center of town, was always distinguished by the throngs of soldiers and civilians waiting their turn outside its doors. The omnipresent and intrusive nature of their authority in areas under military law is evidenced by the comments of contemporary observers, which will be referenced later in this report.

The Provost Marshal in Harpers Ferry

Harpers Ferry changed hands several times during the Civil War, but the Union army occupied the town for the majority of the period. The Confederates probably implemented a provost system during the longest period of Confederate occupation from April 18 to June 15, 1861. Joseph Barry, a resident of Harpers Ferry during the war, mentions that during this period of occupation guards were posted along the streets and many citizens were "confined in filthy guard houses" by the Confederates, suggesting that military law was in effect.<sup>128</sup> Little is known about the military control of Harpers Ferry during the intermittent Union occupation during 1861 and 1862; the volatility of the situation during that time suggests that any provost system in place was not on the intricate and organized level of the 1863-65 period.<sup>129</sup>

In Spring 1863, the 34th Massachusetts was the first Union regiment to occupy Harpers Ferry after the Confederate evacuation of that year.<sup>130</sup> With the arrival of the 34th,<sup>131</sup> a provost marshal's operation was set up with office staff and provost guards, which remained in place for the remainder of the war, except for a few brief occasions when Confederate troops forced federal evacuation. The numbers of staff which worked in the office ranged from two (a provost marshal and clerk), to six (four clerks, an assistant provost marshal, and a provost marshal), to at least eight, including six clerks.<sup>132</sup> The staff changed quite often, as both officers and clerks were ordered back to their regiments at intervals, replaced by soldiers from other regiments.

A large number of the Harpers Ferry provost marshal staff during the war were detailed from the 34th Massachusetts regiment, including clerk Charles Moulton, who arrived with his regiment and was detailed as provost marshal clerk on October 8. Two of the provost marshals Moulton reported to during his tenure, Captain Potter and Captain Pratt, were from the 34th, adding to the camaraderie of the office (Pratt and Potter both achieved the rank of major before the end of the war). Because of Moulton's outstanding writing skills and efficiency, he was saved from being ordered back to his regiment many times by provost marshals who found him indispensable. In August 1864, for a period of about two weeks, Moulton was transferred to the quartermaster's office to clerk there.<sup>133</sup>

Thus, Moulton was able to comment on the office operations from 1863 to 1865 (after Lee's surrender) through his position as provost marshal's clerk. The Harpers Ferry office performed all the responsibilities typical of provost marshal offices in areas under martial law: administering the oath of allegiance, regulating civil affairs, issuing passes for travel in and out of Harpers Ferry, supervising the provost guard, reading mail and opening packages looking for contraband, even regulating prices and controlling the illegal liquor sales to soldiers. In the five hours the pass room was open each day, it was not uncommon for provost marshal staff to issue several hundred passes.<sup>134</sup> Staff were on duty all night to receive prisoners or address any other concerns that might arise.<sup>135</sup> The clerks were responsible for completing reports of all daily transactions and lists of prisoners, as well as compiling them into weekly and monthly reports. The provost marshal was even responsible for supervising executions. The provost marshal staff, like others in the army who worked in the Harpers Ferry business district, interacted with the civilians and patronized the local restaurant proprietors. While relations were at times strained, assignment to the provost office apparently was considered prestigious by the local population; the staff were "the favored recipients of splendid bouquets every day from the young ladies of Bolivar."<sup>136</sup>

Beginning in December 1863, a provost marshal general also was stationed at Harpers Ferry, heading the Department of West Virginia.<sup>137</sup> According to Moulton, his office was "located with Gen. Sullivan's headquarters" and he had command "over all the officers in the Department of West Virginia, including this Division."<sup>138</sup> The special orders naming a Captain Inwood as Provost Marshal of Harpers Ferry on April 7, 1865, illustrates the division of power between the provost marshal and commander of the Middle Military District, General Stevenson, whose headquarters also was located in Harpers Ferry (in park Building 36):

Capt. Inwood will have charge of all matters relating to the Provost Marshal's Dept. except such as specially relate to the command of General Stevenson. All applications for passes through the lines, or to the front, all invoices and permits for sutlers goods for troops other than those under Gen. Stevenson's command, and generally all business concerning troops or persons beyond Gen. Stevenson's lines must be presented at Capt. Inwood's office.

Nothing in this order shall be construed to interfere with the control of Gen. Stevenson in his own command or his power to grant passes to citizens or soldiers within his own lines, or to persons in the military service or duty.

Gen. Stevenson will furnish a company of Infantry as Provost Guard to report to Captain Inwood.<sup>139</sup>

The duties of the provost marshal's office magnified as Harpers Ferry became the base of operations for General Sheridan's Valley campaign in August 1864. The military support services already in Harpers Ferry, such as storehouses of supplies, increased. The Harpers Ferry provost office now supervised all other provost marshals in the military district of Harpers Ferry ("some half-a-dozen offices") of which Harpers Ferry was the headquarters. Approximately 100 prisoners were sent to Harpers Ferry each day and then forwarded to northern prisons. This necessitated larger staff, longer working hours, and relocating the guard house to a larger building to detain these prisoners, as well as an increase in the amount of paperwork coming in and going out.<sup>140</sup> In October, the base of supplies for Sheridan's army was moved to Martinsburg, causing some relief in Moulton's workload but also "a less lively appearance" for Harpers Ferry.<sup>141</sup> By May 1865, passes were no longer required for citizens, and on the twelfth of that month Moulton left to rejoin his regiment, having been finally ordered back.<sup>142</sup>

For the majority of Union occupation (mid-1863 to mid-1865), the provost marshal's office was located in a brick building on the east side of High Street with the ordnance and quartermaster offices in the stone buildings immediately to its north. The location of the provost marshal's office in the vicinity of other military or government offices was customary procedure.<sup>143</sup> In his July 27, 1865, inspection report of government property at Harpers Ferry, Brig. Gen. Edward D. Ramsay noted that the building occupied as the provost marshal's office was "a three story brick" building, which he designated as number 16 on his report, "in fair condition," located on High Street.<sup>144</sup> Charles Moulton described the building as "Number 45 High Street."<sup>145</sup> Located on Wager lot 20, the building was owned by the U. S. government and used prior to the war as a dwelling for armory workers. Armory worker William Moore may have lived there before the Civil War.<sup>146</sup> Figure 5 indicates the probable configuration of this building in the 1860s.

The office was briefly moved to a location on Shenandoah Street by a newly assigned provost marshal in late July 1864, and quickly moved back to the High Street location two weeks later when that provost marshal was reassigned to nearby Sandy Hook. The High Street location was preferred to the dusty but more visible location on Shenandoah Street. Charles Moulton commented that the temporary location "near the depot, in a corner" allowed the interim provost marshal to "show off as much as possible on the Main Street," but in actuality was the poorest location that could have been procured, it being in the central part of town, where the street is blockaded from morning till night with army wagons, rendering the rooms very warm and uncomfortable and a cloud of dust rising continually filled the office and its contents with dirt. The tables and desks were covered with dust....So the first thing we done was to place the property and effects back again in our old, spacious, cool and airy rooms.<sup>147</sup>

The office may have been located elsewhere prior to Moulton's duty. Stencil markings probably relating to the provost marshal's department exist on a second floor wall of a Shenandoah Street building (park building 44); the lettering appears to have been intended for marking barrels. The room may have been used for storage of goods or quarters for provost marshal personnel. Although there appears to have been a Confederate provost marshal's office during that army's occupation, the location of the office is unknown.

(Charles Moulton to Fannie Moulton, March 30, 1864, transcripts of original letters, HFNHP). Since Moulton addressed his correspondence in this manner, it is assumed that these numbers were in common use at that period, although this has not been corroborated due to the scarcity of information on the physical appearance of wartime Harpers Ferry.

Sullivan's determination that Moore lived in the house is based on his examination of the 1860 census.

Based on the arrangement of other provost marshal operations, the Harpers Ferry provost marshal would have located his office on the first (ground-level) floor, the most accessible and visible location.<sup>148</sup> The provost marshal's clerks, including Charles Moulton, lived in the High Street building at least part of the time,<sup>149</sup> probably upstairs; the use of the basement is not known. It may have been used for confiscated goods and clothing, since there is evidence for such use of the basement in a Richmond Confederate provost marshal's office.<sup>150</sup>

In addition to the provost marshal general's office located at headquarters, provost marshal operations also included the prisons, or guard houses. Various buildings were used as guard houses, including the fire engine house, known as John Brown's fort. Nathaniel Hawthorne mentioned that the engine house was "a place of confinement for rebel prisoners" when he visited during the Civil War.<sup>151</sup> Armory factory buildings were also used. One Confederate prisoner held there in late 1863 to early 1864 provided this description. He was immediately taken before the provost marshal and subjected to another examination....Then [he] was placed in the garrison guard-house, a horrible place, worse by far than a jail....Originally it had been part of the old Armory building, burnt during the first year of the war. Nothing but the walls had been left standing; these had been roofed over....There were three large rooms connected by doorways which had no doors, but instead stood a sentinel with loaded musket to prevent going from one apartment to another....The room upon the left was for the use of the officer of the day; that in the center was for Rebel prisoners, while in the one on the right were confined Yankees held in durance for a gamut of crimes, running from desertion to murder....It was hard to become accustomed to those iron bracelets.<sup>152</sup>

Even more space was necessary during Sheridan's campaigns. As Charles Moulton noted,

So great has been the increase in our prisoners that it has become necessary to remove the Guard House to a large and more spacious building. It is now located in a old factory building, four stories high, the Federal, Rebel and Citizen prisoners being placed in separate rooms. The guard occupies the remaining floor...the building being higher it required a smaller guard than before as the prisoners have no way of escape, but to leap out the windows....One of the Federal prisoners did jump out a 4th story window...."<sup>153</sup>

At the height of operations, some Confederate prisoners were kept in Bolivar.<sup>154</sup> Even the upper floors of the Presbyterian church were used as a guard house.<sup>155</sup> Also, two rooms were used as a guard house on property owned by J.C. Smith.<sup>156</sup>

In the yard of one of the guard houses, the provost marshal had placed "a little contrivance" which consisted of "4 sticks driven into the ground and the criminal is spread out and his hands and feet tied to the poles." Moulton implied that this "spread eagle" was the fate of citizens who illegally sold liquor to soldiers.<sup>157</sup>

The provost marshal organization affected the physical landscape beyond these few structures, however, since they controlled the guards who were stationed along the streets and at town borders, and who met every train.

EVIDENCE OF ORIGINAL FURNISHINGS

Discussion of Sources

The evidence for furnishing the Harpers Ferry provost marshal's office has been derived largely from the documentary material contained in Charles Moulton's letters and supplemented by other information listed below. A complete listing of the sources used in this report may be found in the bibliography.

No comprehensive study of the provost marshal's function in the civil war has been written, although aspects have been treated in surveys of the war. Rebel Watchdog: The Confederate States Army Provost Guard, focuses on the provost guards under the marshal and is useful since the Confederacy modeled its provost department after that of the U.S. Army.

Official correspondence and orders located in the Official Records of the Union and Confederate Armies, and in bound compilations of circulars provide information on duties and staff. The Revised U.S. Army Regulations of 1861... (1863) offers guidance on what furnishings and stationery all military offices were allowed.

The only source indicating specific furnishings information for the Harpers Ferry provost marshal's office is the material written by Charles Moulton, provost marshal's clerk at Harpers Ferry, compiled into a volume entitled, Fort Lyon to Harpers Ferry: On the Border of North and South with "Rambling Jour." Transcriptions of the complete, unedited letters to his family are located in Harpers Ferry NHP; these have been used in preference to the edited compilations except for commentary by editors of the volume. Moulton's letters appear to be the best known source of the daily operations of any provost marshal's office during the Civil War. Since Moulton worked as a journalist before the war, his writings are frequent (almost ninety letters have been found, many totaling four pages each) and reflect an observant personality. Also, Moulton's skills as a clerk kept him from being returned to his regiment or reassigned elsewhere, so he was able to write from the office over a two-year period.

The 1865 Ramsay inspection and the 1959 Sullivan report, as well as physical evidence from the extant building, provided information on the contemporary description and prior use of the High Street building in which the provost marshal's office was located.

Moulton mentions that one of his forms was printed at Harpers Ferry at the "new printing office." Descendants of a local family have donated a Civil War period printing press that was used locally after the war and may have been located in the printing office to which Moulton refers.

Prisoner reports and other material from the period in 1863 when Captain Brady was provost marshal at Harpers Ferry and correspondence from Captain Flagg of the quartermaster's office are located on microfilm at Harpers Ferry NHP. General information on Harpers Ferry during the Civil War is summarized in a series of reports by park historian Charles Snell listed in the bibliography. Taylor's The James E. Taylor Sketchbook includes information regarding the military presence at Harpers Ferry. The letters of Joseph Ward and Horace Ball, two Civil War soldiers from the 34th Massachusetts regiment, discuss the life of a soldier stationed in Harpers Ferry. The Civil War reminiscences of Harpers Ferry residents Joseph Barry and Anne Marmion offer supplementary material on the town during this period. Orders contained in Record Group 393 in the National Archives provide very general information about Harpers Ferry military personnel.

No pictures of the Harpers Ferry provost marshal's office exist. Civil War period images of Captain Pratt, provost marshal at Harpers Ferry, are extant.

Some general comparative evidence of other provost marshals' offices aided in the preparation of this report. Diaries and letters of civilians and soldiers mention encounters with provost marshal staff and visits to their offices. These sources tend to be more descriptive than official records, although one must sort through a great quantity of information for brief mentions of physical evidence for the office. These sources are listed in the bibliography.

Comparative interior sketches of provost marshals' offices from both Leslie's and Harper's histories of the war, and exterior photos from several sources are useful since they assist in determining room arrangement, types of furnishings, and exterior treatment. These offices were not all furnished the same, and that diversity is evident in the source material. Since certain regulations pertained to all military offices, images of other types of military offices are included in this report, as well.

From the book, With Sheridan Up the Shenandoah Valley in 1864: Leaves from a Special Artist's Sketchbook and Diary [The James E. Taylor Sketchbook].

Describing High Street: "composed of habitations of brick, stone and wood, with slanting roofs and dormer windows, and railing'd stoops--flush with the sidewalk with alternating piazzas and balustrades at the east and north side of the more pretentious buildings." (p.43)

Taylor mentions dropping a mailpouch off at headquarters on Shenandoah (p.38) and later comments that he was depositing mail in the mailbag at the provost marshal's office (pp. 215, 250). However, given his documented confusion of provost marshals with commanders, it is not likely that the mailbag was located in the provost office.

The following books are to be allowed to each company: one descriptive book, one clothing book, one order book, one morning report book, each one quire, sixteen inches by ten. (p. 24, par. 127. For a list of the quarterly issue of stationery, see Appendix B.)

The regimental and company desk prescribed in army regulations will be transported; also for staff officers, the books, papers, and instruments necessary to their duties. (p. 164, par. 1098)

— The Index to Circulars, Provost Marshal General's Office, 1863

Provost Marshal will, hereafter, make a Weekly Report, upon Blank forms to be furnished from this Bureau, of all officers, soldiers, and citizens employed by them; and will forward the same to this office, through the Acting Assistant Provost Marshal General of their State or Division. ## Other Provost Marshals

The Richmond Confederate passport office "was a filthy one; it was inhabited--for they slept there--by his [General Winder's] rowdy clerks. And when I stepped to the hydrant for a glass of water, the tumbler repulsed me with the smell of whiskey. There was no towel for me to wipe my hands with, and in the long basement room underneath, were a thousand garments of dead soldiers, taken from the hospitals and the battlefields, and exhaling a most disagreeable, if not deleterious, odor." (Jones, A Rebel War Clerk's Diary, p. 69)

The [Richmond Confederate] Provost Marshal's office kept a blackboard on which he who ran might read the names of the regiments sent to the Peninsula....and not until a stranger who was copying from it fled on being questioned was it done away with. (Bill, The Beleaguered City: Richmond, 1861-1865, p. 115. Although this is a fairly trustworthy secondary source, the information on the blackboard should be corroborated since the author did not quote his source.)

Marsena Patrick, Provost Marshal General of the Army of the Potomac, and his staff brought furniture along when he moved into Richmond to be Union provost marshal in 1865. (Patrick, Inside Lincoln's Army: The Diary of Marsena Rudolph Patrick, Provost Marshal General, Army of the Potomac, p. 495)

Of the Charleston Confederate provost marshal operations: "many a luckless wight in military or semi-military costume, who had no leave of absence to show, was trotted off to the guard house, where he either did have or at some future time will have an opportunity of giving an account of himself." (Hagood, Memoirs of the War of Secession: From the Original Manuscripts of Johnson Hagood, p. 78)

The quiet precincts of the city hall were suddenly converted into a veritable camp, to the manifest delight of the urchins who thronged the railings of the enclosure gazing admiringly upon the taut canvass walls. There was a great rush to the passport office. (Hagood, Memoirs of the War of Secession: From the Original Manuscripts of Johnson Hagood, p. 78)

The passport office was now at leisure and finally organized by establishing two offices in different departments, one for citizens with separate desks of application for males and females (whites) and for negroes bond and free; another for the military with a separate desk for invalid soldiers from which all other applicants were excluded. (Hagood, Memoirs of the War of Secession: From the Original Manuscripts of Johnson Hagood, p. 79)

A Confederate soldier named Patterson went to a Confederate provost marshal's office to "procure the necessary papers" to join his command but was directed to Sgt. Crow's office: "As I stood outside waiting my time, I noticed that none came back, but as soon as they received their papers they went upstairs. I 'began to smell a rat' and as I had no notion of remaining cooped up there until tomorrow morning....I thanked my stars that I was still outside and left." (Patterson, Yankee Rebel: The Civil War Journal of Edmund DeWitt Patterson, pp. 80-81)

FURNISHINGS PLAN (Provost Marshal's office)

Overview

Physical evidence of the High Street building and descriptions in the Moulton material indicate that the Harpers Ferry provost marshal's office consisted of a front and a back room. The furnishings plan takes into consideration the configuration and size of the High Street office, although this can only be done in a general way in order to accommodate the architecture and interior space of Building 34.<sup>158</sup> In the High Street office, all traffic went through the front room, which was used primarily as a passport office and staffed by clerks and an assistant provost marshal. The provost marshal and the chief clerk occupied the rear office.<sup>159</sup> The passport office should have three desks with chairs for the staff, as well as a bench to accommodate others waiting. The staff varied between two and eight, and the exact number of desks or chairs is not known; therefore, the number of desks has been based on the space available in the rooms. The Army Regulations provide for "six common chairs" for the whole office. The pictorial evidence indicates that the chairs probably would have been some kind of Windsor.<sup>160</sup> There was a railing in the front room, placed across the room to divide the clerks' desks from the civilians and soldiers waiting for passes.<sup>161</sup> The desks held the standard desk equipment, as well as mail which was read and confiscated if disloyal sentiments were found. There are several references to passes in Moulton; since the front room was the pass room, it would be logical for pass blanks to be stored in the front room.<sup>162</sup> Bibles would have been located in the front office on desks, readily available for administering the oath of allegiance.<sup>163</sup> Fireplace equipment was issued by the government.<sup>164</sup> Moulton mentions a bench, probably backless, by the fireplace in the front room, which may have been pushed out of the way or moved to the waiting area during the day. Locating the bench by the fireplace would hamper the flow in Building 34,

<sup>160</sup> The army regulations only allow for "two common desks or tables"(p. 162); given the fact that officers purchased their own desks which they brought with them to their various assignments (personal interview with Bill Brown, July 16, 1990), this number for the clerks is less than that mentioned by Moulton. The type of desks varied, as shown by the pictorial evidence, and by the fact that Moulton mentions "tables and desks."

<sup>161</sup> Moulton, April 17, 1864. For examples of railings used in interiors for similar purposes, see figures 22 and 23. The railing in the Harpers Ferry Provost Marshal's office may have been more temporary in nature.

therefore the bench should be used as a supplemental bench in the waiting area.<sup>165</sup>

Each month's papers were placed in pigeonholes, probably in the desks in the back room, since that is where the monthly reports were filled out. The monthly reports of prisoners were 2 by 3 feet in size and would have been folded to fit in the pigeonholes. The weekly reports sent from each provost office in the division would also have been stored in the back room, as well as other papers and ledgers.<sup>166</sup> The office had at least one bed, most likely a hospital cot, for clerks to sleep on when on duty, and probably temporary bedding, such as bedrolls. Since Moulton describes four deserters sleeping in the "adjoining room" when he is writing from what appears to be the front room, the cot should be placed in the back room.

Other furnishings included hooks or pegs in the wall on which to hang coats and hats.<sup>167</sup> Moulton also fabricated placards in his own handwriting, possibly the names of the staff for each desk (or at least the officers with their titles) or a sign posted with the pass room hours (9-11 a.m. and 1-4 p.m.).<sup>168</sup> The provost marshal's office had a large quantity of confiscated goods, clothing, and food on hand at any given time. While it is not clear whether these would have been stored in the office, or perhaps in the basement, it would not be inaccurate to have a sampling in the office.

The excerpt below from a letter written by Charles Moulton describing the evening shift helps to explain the arrangement of the office:

It is Sabbath evening half past 10 o'clock....I am seated at the desk, passing industriously the hour of my "turn" at sitting up at night, waiting for the train....inside there is a blazing fire....Near the fire-place lies the Lieut. of the Guard at the depot, on a bench sleeping...just before going on his tedious night's duty. One of the clerks sits half-reclining, at one of the desks, deeply absorbed in the pages of a volume of "yellow-kivered litterture." In the neighboring room are four persons who have "put up" as guests of the hospitable "P.M. Hotel-de-Ville."<sup>169</sup>

The office should also include objects that reflect the staff's connection to their hometowns, since many of the staff were from Massachusetts and some even came from the same regiment. Evidence indicates that Moulton posted a cattle show notice from Pittsfield, Massachusetts, on a wall in the office. Since Moulton subscribed to The Berkshire Courier, and others in the office read it as well, a copy should be placed on one of the desks.<sup>170</sup> Moulton's family addressed his mail to the provost marshal's office; therefore, letters from home would probably be located on or in the desks. As the above quotation suggests, the office could also contain reading material used to pass the long evening hours. Local female citizens gave the clerks daily "bouquets" in the spring, probably consisting of fruits and vegetables, which should be placed on the desks or tables.<sup>171</sup>

The exterior of the building is integral to the furnishings plan. The building had to be immediately identifiable, since everyone traveling in and out of town was required to stop there first. Based on photographs and sketches of exteriors of other provost marshal offices, the exterior should have a large sign in black lettering over the door reading "Provost Marshal" and possibly an American flag hanging outside.<sup>172</sup>

All of the furnishings should look well-used, since hundreds of people passed through the office in a day and buildings used by the military during the war did not survive in very good condition. Brigadier General Ramsay remarked that "the costly quarters of the Superintendent of the Armory, of the Paymaster, and other conspicuous and valuable buildings belonging to the government, have been wantonly abused, and I am sorry to say, as I am credibly informed, mostly by our own troops [during the course of the war]."<sup>173</sup> Since this building had been an armory worker's dwelling prior to the war, fixtures appropriate to comparable domestic living spaces of the period should be installed.

As the pictorial evidence indicates, interiors of provost marshal's offices varied widely. This may be a result of the expediency often necessary in setting up such an office and instituting martial law. The building's previous use also affected the furnishings since the military used domestic, commercial, and municipal buildings. The furnishings could reflect the furniture and fixtures of previous occupants who were forced in many instances to flee from the area. The furnishings also reflected the relative permanency of the office; certainly the relative stability of the Harpers Ferry provost marshal's office suggests that it would contain more objects from the "settling in" process, than would an office at the onset of Union occupation (see figure 6, the illustration of the Charleston, South Carolina, provost marshal office for an example of the latter).

Although the evidence indicates that Harpers Ferry had a printing office, a Civil War printing press has been included in the furnishings plan for the provost marshal's office. An original press with a local provenance has been donated to the park. The press was probably used by Union forces during the occupation, possibly in a building once located on the second lot east of Bridge Street.<sup>174</sup> Printed forms and handbills were important to the operation of a provost marshal's office. Therefore, furnishings division and park staff felt that the printing press should be displayed in the provost marshal's office unless another more appropriate location is found for it.

Interpretive Objectives and Operating Plan

The provost marshal's office will allow an interpretation of the impact of the Civil War on Harpers Ferry, allowing the visitors to understand what life was like here for local citizens, military personnel stationed here, and visitors passing through town. An important aspect of the interpretation is the interaction of local civilians with military personnel from the north. Moulton comments on many differences between New England and Virginia/West Virginia, and the attempt to preserve their northern culture through objects displayed in the office. The office may also stimulate discussions about the people who traveled through Harpers Ferry during the war, including prisoners, and their different impressions of the town.

During the busiest tourist seasons, the exhibit will be staffed and visitors will be invited into the front room. The back room will be viewed from the doorway at the rear of the building, which will be fitted with a hinged, full-length glass or acrylic plastic door in addition to its historic door. By special arrangement with park staff, visitors with mobility limitations will be escorted through this doorway and through the back room so that they can view the front room through doorway 110. When unstaffed, visitors will enter room 102 from Shenandoah Street and view the room from behind the historic barrier. An alarm will sound if visitors attempt to cross this barrier. The rear room will still be viewed from the rear doorway. Interpretive panels located inside the front and rear doors will provide background information when the building is unstaffed.

<sup>174</sup> Memorandum from Dennis Frye to Supervisors, et al., April 1, 1993, p. 1. This memo draws its conclusions from a document: "Statement of Abandoned Property at Harpers Ferry and Bolivar, Jefferson Co. Va.," February 24, 1864, No. 19698, Cotton and Captured Property Records, Entry 370, located in U.S. Dept. of Treasury Records, NARA, RG 56.

Documentation for provost marshal's and clerks' wear may be gleaned from Moulton evidence and comparative pictorial documentation. Costumed females are appropriate waiting on a bench, but never behind the desks. The interpretation of this exhibit would be enhanced if a sentry were stationed at the entrance, since this was a frequent practice at provost marshal's offices.

Concept for Interpretive Panels

The purpose of these panels will be to explain the functions of a provost marshal's office and to describe what it was like to live in an occupied town during the Civil War. One panel will be located in the front room and one in the back room.

Certain duties of the provost marshal's office, such as issuing passes for travel, seizing contraband, controlling the mail, administering the oath of allegiance, regulating prices, and preventing illegal liquor sales to soldiers impacted directly on the lives of the inhabitants of Harpers Ferry.

Other duties included supervising the provost guard and prisons, capturing deserters, supervising stragglers, and completing the voluminous paperwork involved in all of the above.

PART II

THE GENERAL STORE

ANALYSIS OF HISTORIC OCCUPANCY

General Stores in Harpers Ferry During the Mid-Nineteenth Century

The geographical and physical location of Harpers Ferry helped to promote the growth and expansion of its mercantile trade. With its close proximity to Washington, D.C. and its access to both land and water routes, Harpers Ferry was ideally situated for commercial enterprises. By 1851 Harpers Ferry was connected to the outside world by two bridges that accessed three major turnpikes, had a well established canal system along its riverbanks and was located on the route of two railroad companies.<sup>175</sup>

The residents of Harpers Ferry obtained the necessities of life from a variety of sources. Those with access to land undoubtedly kept a garden and perhaps livestock as well. Residents could also purchase food at the Harpers Ferry farmers market, described by war correspondent James Taylor in late summer 1864:

On the shore beside the North Abutment, a subject presented in the Harpers Ferry Market in full blast which holds forth each day, Sunday excepted--a privilege, from necessity, granted the farmers of the East bank of the Shenandoah [e.g., Loudoun County, Virginia--Confederate territory] irrespective of their political affiliations, providing they guarded their tongues and attend strictly to the business in hand, the disposal of their merchandise.

The truck, as I made note, comprised butter, head cheese, eggs, poultry, beef, bacon, lamb, hams, spare ribs, new potatoes, and blackberries which were brought in sufficient quantities to supply the wants of the Ferryyites and army mess caterers.

Without the roped off space, or market, was a cordon of vigilant-eyed provo guards with loaded Enfields and orders to prevent, at all hazards, surreptitious communications passing between the disloyal residents [sic] and secret emisaries [sic] of the Confederacy in the guise of hucksters, and to guard against spies slipping through the bound.<sup>176</sup>

Items that could not be purchased at the farmers market could usually be found in a wide variety of retail establishments located in the lower town, including ready-made clothing stores, confectioneries, drug stores, and dry goods stores, among others. During the period 1850-1865 at least fifteen merchants sold dry goods in the Lower Town section of Harpers Ferry, but there were never more than six conducting business in the same year.<sup>177</sup> At the end of this chapter is a map locating Harpers Ferry merchants.

Actually, the terms "dry goods" and "general store" are both essentially misnomers. Virtually all of these stores sold a wide variety of goods, including but not limited to food, liquor, medicine, tobacco products, housewares, ready-made clothing, hardware, books, stationery, as well as dry goods and notions. In Harpers Ferry, many of the stores specialized in one aspect of this trade. For example, Singleton Chambers sold a huge variety of dry goods but virtually no food.<sup>178</sup> On the other hand, Isaac Fleming sold a variety of food but no dry goods at all.<sup>179</sup> Merchants seldom referred to their establishments as dry goods or general stores, instead simply listing the merchandise available, the name of the proprietor, and occasionally the location of the store.<sup>180</sup> For the purposes of this report, all stores selling a variety of merchandise will be called general stores.

Jefferson and Loudoun County general store inventories reveal the types of supplies available in nearby stores. Very little fresh meat, fruits, or vegetables appear in the inventories, although perishables must have been available occasionally at stores that took farm produce in trade. Probably most customers purchased fresh foods at the local market. The fact that fresh foods do not appear on the inventories may also indicate that trustees sold off perishable items quickly instead of waiting until the main auction was held.

Stores did stock foods that had a long shelf life, like preserved meats and fish, crackers, cheese, dried fruit, and fruits preserved in jars. Although fruits and vegetables preserved in metal cans were available in the United States as early as 1837,<sup>181</sup> evidence from inventories indicates that canned food was not regularly stocked in local general stores in the 1850s.<sup>182</sup> The expense of canned food generally justified its use only in situations where food could not be regularly obtained in the usual fashion, for example, during long journeys overland or by sea or during a war.<sup>183</sup> In fact, the widespread use and acceptance of canned food probably dates to the years after the Civil War, when many soldiers became introduced to the concept of food in tins.

The foodstuffs most commonly found in local stores are staple goods, including flour, sugar, rice, salt, coffee, tea, spices, extracts, tobacco (including cigars, snuff, and loose tobacco), molasses, oils, vinegar, and a variety of medicines. Stores also sold a surprising variety of condiments such as mustard, bottled pepper sauce, and catsup, leading one to speculate on the need to spice up what was probably a fairly monotonous diet.

Storekeepers who obtained a license were allowed to sell liquor and wines in their stores. Probably the most widely available item besides tobacco was candy, indicating that general stores catered to the vices of both old and young.

A variety of housewares could be purchased at many general stores, including dishes, knives and cutlery, tinware, ironware, glassware, stoneware, lighting supplies, and cleaning supplies. Some stores sold blind paper, wallpaper, rag carpeting, bedding, and other furnishing goods. The availability of indigo and other dyes indicates that some cloth finishing took place in local households.

The large quantity and variety of textiles in the inventories suggests that members of local households also sewed their own clothes on a regular basis. The quality of cloth varied from rugged jean, a twilled cloth made from linen and cotton, to fine silks and satins. Crepe, a light silk fabric frequently used for mourning clothes, is often found on inventories. Stores that stocked a large quantity of cloth usually also stocked the patterns, buttons, thread, and other notions required for completing the garment.

Items of clothing that could not be easily or fashionably made at home were also available at many general stores. Hats and caps, boots and shoes, and accessories such as fans, parasols, handkerchiefs, belts, socks, gloves, ties, bonnets, and collars appeared most commonly on the inventories. Pants, shirts, and vests appeared rarely, probably because the general store could not compete with the

<sup>182</sup> References to canned food indicate that it was scarce and expensive. Two cans of peas appear in the listing of the sale of the Isaac Rose property in Jefferson County in 1854 selling for $.31 each. In the same inventory, a working shirt sold for $.40, and four pounds of prunes for $.24.

<sup>183</sup> Admiral William Edward Parry took canned roasted veal on his voyage in search of a northwest passage in 1824. Alec Davis asserts that "the first satisfactory method of food preservation in containers was evolved in France early in the nineteenth century, to feed Napoleon's armies." Davis, Package and Print: Development of Container and Label Design, p. 80.

price and variety available in the local ready-made clothing stores. Personal items like hair accessories, cologne, toothbrushes, and luggage were also available.

Some stores stocked stationery and books. Generally, the majority of books were schoolbooks, including such classics as the McGuffey Reader series. Bibles and hymnbooks were also popular. Naturally, writing paper, pens, pencils, ink, envelopes, slates, and slate pencils were also readily available. The musically inclined could acquire jews harps or violin strings.

The stores that carried hardware usually stocked a variety of hand tools, locks, nails, and other fasteners. Harness and grooming supplies were often listed in the inventories. Plows and other agricultural equipment were available for the farmer. The hunter could supply himself with guns and ammunition, while the fisherman could acquire fishing line and hooks. Those who preferred to be independent of the local shoemaker and repairer could purchase shoemaking supplies.

Illustrations of general stores in the nineteenth century invariably show a cramped and cluttered interior. Some stores tried to impose an order on the display by putting grocery items on one side of the store room (usually the right) and dry goods on the other. Glass, hardware, and crockery were often located to the rear of the store.<sup>184</sup> Certain store fittings appear to have been standard. Candy was typically stored in large glass jars and tea in metal canisters, both on shelves behind the counter. Frequently barrels, sacks of food, or other large items were slumped on the floor. At least one set of scales and weights stood on the counter, as well as wrapping paper and string. Paper bags, which did not become widely available until after the Civil War, appear locally in the 1863 inventory of goods in Thomas Rawlins hardware store.<sup>185</sup> More commonly, tea, coffee, spices or other "dry" items would be weighed and wrapped in paper, as evidenced by such entries as the listing of "7 papers polishing powders" in an 1857 inventory of Israel Russell's business.<sup>186</sup>

Goods once viewed as luxury items became increasingly common as improvements in the transportation systems of the latter half of the nineteenth century affected the volume and variety of merchandise offered for sale. As railroads replaced the canals as the major transporter, merchants were able to purchase goods at lower prices. Better and cheaper transportation also encouraged farmers to specialize in cash crops, freeing farmers from the need to patronize a single store which assigned them credit for groceries and clothing.<sup>187</sup> In Harpers Ferry, deed books document the local practice of assigning the wages and powers of attorney of armory workers to town merchants as settlement on outstanding bills.<sup>188</sup>

The increasing trend towards a cash-based system in the mid-nineteenth century helped to offset the control of merchants over workers and farmers. The stores in Harpers Ferry reflect this change in business. In an announcement of his store's opening (in park building 45), John Price notifies the public that since his dry goods and grocery establishment will be "selling exclusively for Cash, he is enabled to sell at lower prices than at credit Stores...."<sup>189</sup> Thomas Peacher, who operated a business at the corner of Shenandoah and High Streets (park building 12) advertised in 1856 that:

...[he] would respectfully inform his friends and the public generally, that he has opened a large and well selected stock of Dry Goods, Groceries, Queensware, Books, Shoes, Hats, Caps, &c. in the Store Room known as "Stephenson's Corner" [sic] being on the corner of Main and High Streets, to which he invites the attention of all who desire to buy CHEAP for cash. Our goods having been purchased for cash we are enabled to sell 25 to 50 per [sic] cheaper than can be bought elsewhere.<sup>190</sup>

However, some merchants continued to accept produce in exchange for goods. James McGraw, who operated grocery and liquor stores on Shenandoah Street, advertised that he would take corn in exchange for merchandise as late as 1876.<sup>191</sup>

In the early nineteenth century, most merchants made yearly buying trips to major cities or wholesale centers. Since goods tended to be scarce in the earlier years, merchants purchased whatever was available.<sup>192</sup> However, by mid-century transportation had improved to the point that merchants could easily travel twice a year to large eastern cities where a huge selection of dry goods, clothing, and other items were readily available. Most merchants purchased stock in spring and fall to accommodate their customers clothing and dry goods needs during the changing seasons. Over and over the headlines announce the arrival of new stock:

Latest Arrival. We have now completed opening our stock of Fall and Winter Goods.<sup>194</sup>

Just arrived, new and cheap. The undersigned has just returned from the Eastern Markets with the largest and most complete stock of Goods he has ever offered at this place.<sup>195</sup>

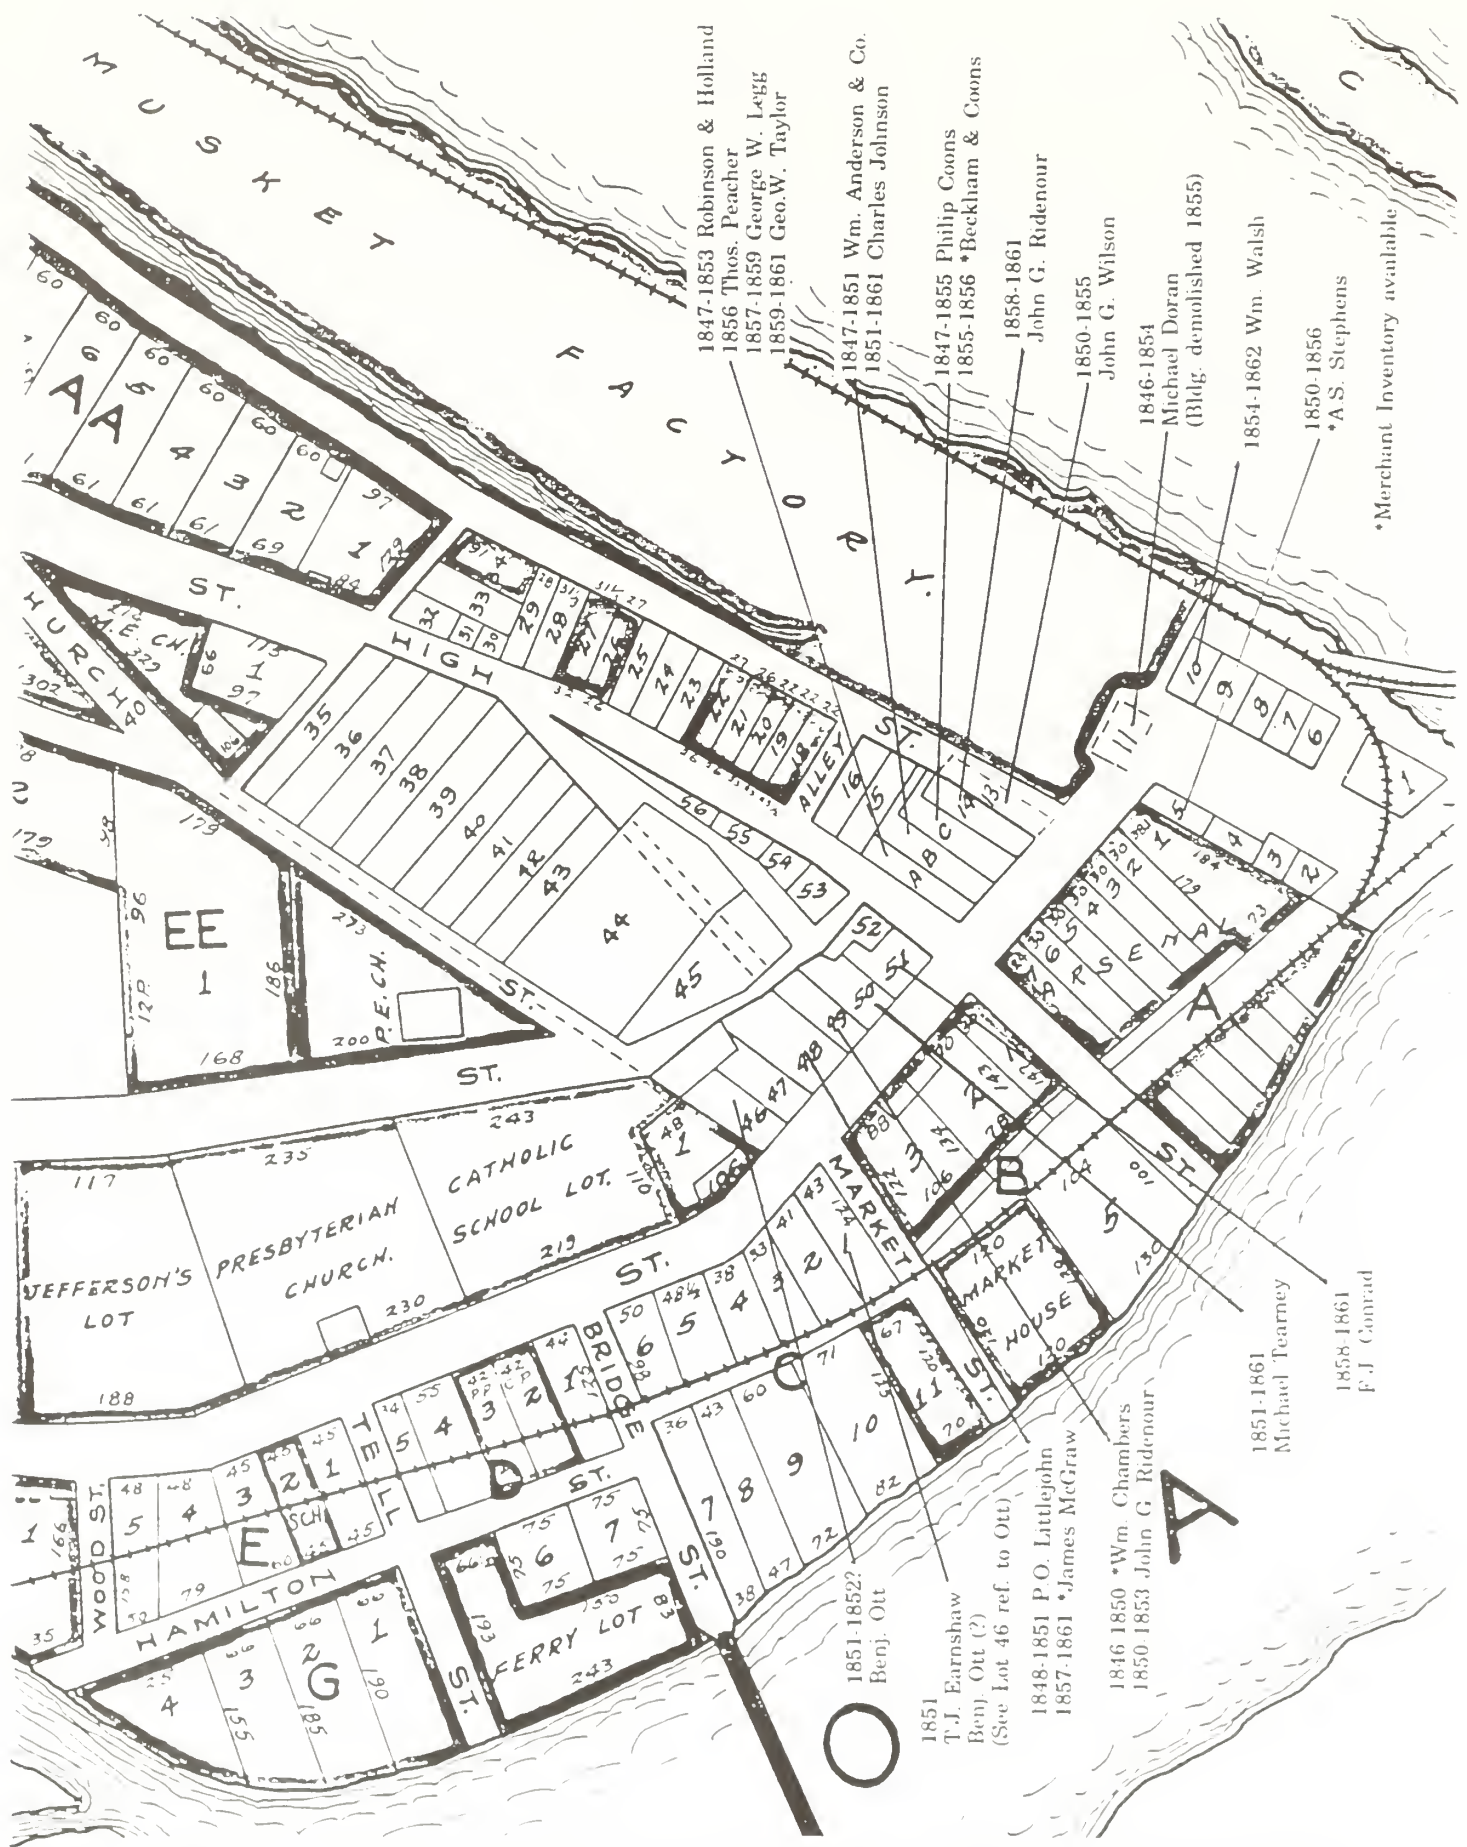

Both railroad and canal facilitated the transportation of these goods to Harpers Ferry. By the Civil War, a complex transportation network allowed the distribution of an amazing quantity of goods across most of the country. Although many products were sold in sophisticated packages, the bulk of items in a general store were sold the way they had been for centuries, singly or in packages made up by the storekeeper. To become more competitive, many storekeepers insisted on a cash only policy, although the barter system hung on in small towns through the nineteenth century. Thus, before the Civil War, the groundwork was laid for the great changes in merchandising that would occur in the last decades of the century.

EVIDENCE OF ORIGINAL FURNISHINGS

Discussion of Sources

The furnishings plan for the general store is based on evidence from inventories, advertisements, and illustrations from the mid-nineteenth century. Inventories were collected from Jefferson and Loudoun counties for the years 1850-1860. An inventory was selected if it specifically mentioned that it contained articles from a general or dry goods store; if it was the inventory of a known general or dry goods merchant; or if it seemed to contain a quantity or variety of items too large for personal use. A total of 11 potentially useful inventories were collected and are reproduced in this report.

Some inventories are more complete than others. Generally, inventories or lists of sales of the estate of a deceased merchant have been judged to be the most complete and, therefore, most accurately reflect the contents of the store. A list of items in a deed of trust is useful because it indicates the kinds of things in a particular store, but it is probably not complete since the owner usually selected specific items to use as collateral.

Inventories were examined from both Jefferson and Loudoun counties in order to get a broad view of store merchandise while staying in the same geographic area. With a few minor exceptions, the list of furnishings is based solely on the inventory of Thomas Dorrell of Loudoun County. Close comparisons of all the inventories revealed that the Dorrell inventory was the most appropriate choice for this exhibit in terms of time period, quantity of merchandise, and variety of stock. Using one inventory exclusively assures that the refurnishing represents the actual contents of a particular store, and is not simply a compilation of typical general store items. This approach will result in the most historically accurate interior possible, given the constraints of available evidence.

However, inventories do not usually give information concerning the placement of each item. For this information this report depends on comparative pictorial evidence, consisting largely of lithographs, paintings, drawings, billheads, and advertising material. This pictorial evidence dates from the 1850s through the end of the nineteenth century, although considerably more weight has been placed on the earlier evidence.

Finally, advertisements from local newspapers for shops in Harpers Ferry and the surrounding communities supplied information on what was available at nearby stores.

Inventories

The following inventories have been edited and reorganized into categories to facilitate comparisons. In most inventories the prices for each item listed have been deleted to save space. No objects have been deleted from the inventories; however, some items have been combined. For example, if 100 yards of calico was listed in the original inventory in five 20 yard lots, the fabric was listed in the edited inventory simply as "100 yards calico." The items have been divided into the following categories: food and containers; housewares; clothing and accessories; dry goods and notions; hardware; books and supplies; and store supplies. This arrangement assists the reader in ascertaining the particular specialty of a store, if one existed, or at least the relative emphases placed on different kinds of stock.

FURNISHINGS PLAN (General Store)

Overview

The furnishings plan for the general store is based on the sale bill of the property of Thomas Dorrell, deceased, taken on March 6, 1854. This document was selected as the basis for the plan because the date is very close to the interpretive period of the exhibit, the list of items is complete and comprehensive, and the quantity of items seemed appropriate for the size of the store that is to be historically furnished.

Dorrell carried a wide assortment of food, housewares, clothing, dry goods, and hardware. Spices, coffee, cured meats, candy, tobacco, liquor, sugar, and other staples make up the bulk of the food in the inventory. Dorrell may have sold some fresh produce taken in trade from his customers which does not appear in the inventory. Housewares include dishes, cutlery, glassware, lighting supplies, cleaning supplies, and cookware. In terms of clothing, the inventory lists mostly boots, shoes, hats, caps, and accessories, such as handkerchiefs, gloves, and hose. Dorrell stocked a wide variety of dry goods from cheap jean to silk. The hardware stock consisted of small tools, nails, screws, locks, and knives.

The layout of the store is based on period illustrations. When entering the store, dry goods were generally displayed on the left and food on the right, with housewares against the back wall. However, the unusually large number of doors and windows in the side walls of Building 35 necessitated a slight alteration of this arrangement.

Interpretive Objectives and Operating Plan

According to the Interpretive Prospectus, the historically furnished general store should give visitors "some understanding of commercial and domestic history"<sup>196</sup> while tying in to the major themes of the park. "The general store merchandise will relate to the type of clientele in this 'government town' and to the types of transportation that would have brought it here: canal and railroad."<sup>197</sup> The furnishings plan contains many examples of goods manufactured in larger towns and brought to Harpers Ferry by boat or train. The store also displays produce supposedly taken by the merchant in trade for manufactured items. Some of the items for sale, such as the extracts and spices, have very sophisticated packages. Other merchandise, like flour and molasses, are displayed as they would have been in the eighteenth century. Thus, the general store stands on the brink of modern marketing and shows an interesting mix of earlier and later forms of packaging and distribution.

The interpretation of the general store is similar to that of the ready-made clothing store since the Civil War acted as a watershed in both industries. Just as the Civil War provided incentive and opportunity to fit and clothe many men with ready-made garments, it also necessitated the provision of millions of men with a wide variety of foods packaged to withstand the rigors of long transportation and a variety of climates. The Civil War also introduced millions of men to the convenience and palatability of canned and packaged foods, breaking down resistance to the unfamiliarity of such items. After the war, manufacturers who had provisioned the army during the war were set up to provision the home. Improved rail transportation networks in the late 1860s and 1870s also contributed to the increase in the use of packaged foods.

Therefore, the interpretation of the general store looks both forward and backward. Many of the items and marketing techniques date back to the eighteenth century. However, the appearance of bottled and packaged foods and ready-made clothing presage the explosion of manufactured goods that will become available virtually nationwide in the last decades of the nineteenth century.

The general store will be open to the visitor during regular park hours. The store is accessible to individuals with mobility limitations through the rear door that opens onto the backyard ramp. During peak visitation, a costumed interpreter will staff the exhibit. Either male or female interpreters are appropriate in a general store. During the off-season, barriers will be installed at the front and rear doors of the shop to allow visitors to step inside and view the interior. Freestanding, moveable panels located behind the barriers will interpret the scene to the visitor. The conceptual plan for the panels appears after the List of Furnishings.

Concept for Interpretive Panels

These interpretive panels will explain the transitional nature of this store. Much of the inventory is similar to stores from the early nineteenth century. However, some products like spices and extracts foreshadowed the packaging revolution to take place after the Civil War. The Civil War played a major role in packaging history, since it necessitated the provision of millions of men with a wide variety of foods packaged to withstand the rigors of long transportation and a variety of climates. As a direct result of the war, the manufacturing of packaged foods, like the manufacturing of ready-made clothing, was pursued on a large scale. Additionally, millions of soldiers were introduced to canned and packaged food, helping to break down resistance to this new way of eating.

Other points to be made if space permits include:

1. Fresh produce and meat were sometimes taken in trade from customers and sold in general stores, but most people bought these items from the weekly market in town and only bought staples from the store.
2. A wide variety of dry goods and housewares were available in town because of the trains and canal, which connected Harpers Ferry with all of the major Eastern cities.

PART III

STIPES' BOARDING HOUSE

ANALYSIS OF HISTORIC OCCUPANCY

Both government buildings and private residences served a variety of military functions during the Civil War occupation of Harpers Ferry. During the Civil War, Building 34/35 was a 2 1/2-story brick house with a one story kitchen attached at the southwest corner. The house had been occupied from 1818 to 1858 by the master armorers employed at the Harpers Ferry Armory. For a brief period, from 1858-1859, the armory's paymaster's clerk occupied the building. Building 34/35 was probably vacant when the Civil War broke out.

During the Civil War, Building 36, immediately to the east of Building 34/35, was "a favorite Army Headquarters from the opening of hostilities."<sup>198</sup> Because of its proximity to headquarters, Building 34/35 was a logical place for military officers to board. In 1865, Brig. Gen. Edward D. Ramsay stated that Building 34/35 was "occupied as quarters for Officers."<sup>199</sup> However, in 1864, James Taylor, a newspaperman, described this building as the Stipes' Hotel, or boarding house.<sup>200</sup>

James E. Taylor was employed as a visual reporter for Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper during his five months' sojourn in the northern Shenandoah Valley in 1864. The contents of Taylor's The James E. Taylor Sketchbook are, in the author's words, "the amplification of a Diary I kept and Sketches I made while accompanying General Philip H. Sheridan in the capacity of a Special Artist during his Campaign in the Shenandoah Valley, in 1864."<sup>201</sup> Sketches by Taylor and other "special artists" were commissioned by newspapers to illustrate the written stories submitted by the correspondents. These sketches served as the only immediate graphic illustrations of the war for the rest of the populace, since the technology for mass producing photographs did not exist at that time.

Intending to join the Valley Army near Harpers Ferry, Taylor arrived in town for the first time on Tuesday, August 9, 1864. He was immediately approached by a "runner," sent out to drum up business, who conducted him to a local hotel run by Mrs. Cornelia Stipes. Taylor occupied a room under the eaves on the top floor of Stipes' boarding house.<sup>202</sup> Taylor's sketch of his room appears in this section. His drawing of the exterior in which he identifies Mrs. Stipes' boarding house as Building 35 appears in the illustrations section (figure 1).

Taylor relates that "Mrs. Stipes catered to sojourners at the Ferry to the extent of table board and lodging, not from choice but necessity caused by her husband's business reverses owing to the War, and his inability to catch on again, when it fell to the lot of Madam to entertain transients to keep the wolf from the door."<sup>203</sup> Taylor must have gotten his facts wrong in this case, since Mrs. Cornelia Stipes was widowed in 1840 when her husband Thomas died of consumption,<sup>204</sup> and she is listed as the head of household in every census from 1840 until her death between 1880 and 1883.<sup>205</sup> Research efforts have failed to locate a formal agreement granting Mrs. Stipes permission to run a boarding house in a government building. We know that the provost marshal routinely granted licenses to local merchants to operate businesses in vacant buildings in town.<sup>206</sup> Keeping borders was a common way for widows to earn a living in Harpers Ferry, and Mrs. Stipes may have applied informally for permission to use an empty building. Seven of the eight people listed as boarding house keepers in the 1860 Harpers Ferry census are women.

Mrs. Stipes was not listed as a boarding house keeper in the 1860 census, although at least one apparently unrelated person, a 25 year old male machinist, was living in her household.<sup>207</sup> Also living in her household in 1860 and presumably in 1864 as well were Mrs. Stipes' three daughters, Anna, Martha, and Medora. Taylor particularly remembered Medora, "a tall stately fluffy-haired blonde,"<sup>208</sup> who was about nineteen years old in 1864. At the time of the 1870

census, Medora is listed as having two children, aged 5 and 3, and is living with her mother.<sup>209</sup>

In The James E. Taylor Sketchbook, Taylor mentions that a coterie of newspapermen were staying at Stipes' boarding house.

On reaching the house, I found on the porch two new arrivals by the morning train who, much to my satisfaction, proved to be newspaper men, with whom I was not slow in brushing up an acquaintance.<sup>210</sup>

The newspaperman gathered information and exchanged leads with each other during mealtimes and while gathered on the front stoop.<sup>211</sup> A group of them decided to "join forces" and "proceed to the front without delay."<sup>212</sup>

Taylor left to join the army at the front the day after he arrived in Harpers Ferry. He returned to Stipes' boarding house many times during the next five months, frequently obtaining the same room. While in the area he drew many sketches of Harpers Ferry and the surrounding countryside.

On December 20, 1864, Taylor left Harpers Ferry after receiving instructions from his employer to cover Benjamin F. Butler's Army of the James positioned at Bermuda Hundred, Virginia.

In April of 1865, Mrs. Stipes purchased property "nearly opposite the Presbyterian Church,"<sup>213</sup> and may have gone into the boarding house business wholeheartedly at that point, since she is listed as a boarding house keeper in the 1870 census.<sup>214</sup> Perhaps she moved out of Building 34/35 at this time, because by July 1865, Building 34/35 was described as officers' quarters.

EVIDENCE OF ORIGINAL FURNISHINGS for James Taylor's Room

Discussion of Sources

The source for this furnished exhibit is Taylor's The James E. Taylor Sketchbook, which contains both a written description and a sketch of Taylor's accommodation in Stipes' boarding house. Taylor states that his sketchbook is an "amplification" of a diary and sketchbook he kept during the Civil War. He reworked his sketchbook in the 1890s, forty years after the events he is describing took place. Taylor himself admits that

Nothing is more untrustworthy than personal recollections after the events they endeavor to recall have receded a third or more of a century into the past unless culled from positive data secured at the time.<sup>215</sup>

Taylor does not say how much of the text or how many of the drawings were added by him in the 1890s.

Excerpts from Taylor's Sketchbook

p. 30 Under the 'boy's' pilotage, I land at 'Hotel de Stipes,' two squares south on Shenandoah Street and a brief interview with Madam ends in my arranging for an indefinite stay.

Mrs. Stipes catered to sojourners at the Ferry to the extent of table board and lodging, not from choice but necessity caused by her husband's business reverses owing to the War, and his inability to catch on again, when it fell to the lot of madam to entertain transients to keep the wolf from the door.

I am at once conducted to my quarters, a sky parlor under the slanting roof, the only available room unoccupied, but make no 'kick,' thankful at being supplied at all, considering the demand at this time by correspondents, army contractors, and sutlers for lodgings.

After preparing my toilet, I descend to the dining room and discuss dinner....

p. 215 The Madam is next sought and I have the satisfaction of assignment to my former 'sky parlor' fortunately for me, unoccupied, where I put in the half hour to the dinner summons in preparing my toilet, as I was considerably travel-stained.

* * *

Stripped to the buff, for the thermometer ranged in the nineties in my loft, I proceed to put a number of special subjects in ship-shape amid perspiration oozing from my pores without a let-up....

p. 247 It is of course, unnecessary to explain that Tom's wants were first attended to, which was a matter of little trouble, Stipes' having a stable.

FURNISHINGS PLAN (James Taylor room)

Overview

James E. Taylor, visual correspondent for Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, stayed on and off from August to December 1864, in a room on the top floor of Building 35, known at that time as Stipes' boarding house. The furnishings plan for this exhibit is based on some of the best evidence in existence for the interior of a building in Harpers Ferry during the Civil War, an original sketch by the occupant of the room, an accomplished artist. The exhibit will be located in the northeast corner room on the second floor of Building 35. Only one corner of the room will be re-created because the evidence for this corner is incontrovertible and virtually nothing is known about the rest of the room. A backdrop will re-create the low, slanted ceiling. Visitors will view the room from room 202, which will contain exhibit panels interpreting Stipes' boarding house. Visitors with mobility limitations will view the exhibit from room 210. The light level in the Taylor exhibit will be kept low, simulating evening. A visitor activated audio program will feature James Taylor's description of his accommodations as recorded in The James E. Taylor Sketchbook, page 30.

Interpretive Objectives and Operating Plan

The furnishings exhibit portraying James E. Taylor's room in Stipes' boarding house provides Harpers Ferry NHP with an ideal setting in which to interpret the life of a war correspondent in Harpers Ferry. Just as they do today, war correspondents risked their lives to bring back written or visual information from the front lines and, like today, this information helped to sway the minds and hearts of the nation.

During the Civil War, Harpers Ferry was filled with people passing through: war correspondents, soldiers, deserters, people displaced by the war. Taylor mentions that he was lucky to find a room in Harpers Ferry when he arrived in August 1864. The life of these transients is another story that can be interpreted in this exhibit.

Most of the time, the exhibit will stand alone with an interpretive panel to describe the scene. At other times, guided tours could provide additional information about the life and times of war correspondent James E. Taylor. Taylor's diary and sketchbook will provide interpreters with a wealth of information about his activities in the area during the Civil War.

Concept for Interpretive Panels

Two identical free-standing panels will be located in room 201, one near the door to room 202 and one near the door to 210. These panels will identify this display as a representation of the room of James E. Taylor, a visual correspondent for Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper. Newspaper correspondents risked their lives to bring back written or visual information from the front lines. Like today, this information helped to sway the minds and hearts of the nation.

Interpretive panels in room 202, the anteroom, will address the role of boarding houses during the war and will describe the bustle and crowded conditions in Harpers Ferry. Although many townspeople fled Harpers Ferry, Taylor's drawings show that the streets were thronged with soldiers, transients, reporters, and others displaced by the war.

The doorways to room 201 should be fitted with removable full-length glass or acrylic plastic barriers.

EVIDENCE OF ORIGINAL FURNISHINGS for Officer's Quarters

Discussion of Sources

No primary evidence exists for an officer's quarters located in Building 34/35. However, three of James Taylor's sketches contain pertinent information for the refurbishing of an officer's lodgings in Harpers Ferry. Obviously, Taylor's sketch of his own accommodations in Building 34/35 gives the best information about furnishings in other rooms of the same boarding house. Another Taylor sketch, "The General's Room in Larrick's Hotel," located in Middletown, Virginia, illustrates a typical public accommodation in the Shenandoah Valley. However, this drawing portrays an interior somewhat grander than the interior of Building 34/35. Taylor's sketch of his lodgings in a local home in Winchester, Virginia, probably portray an interior closer in scale and sophistication to Building 34/35.

An 1850 inventory of the United States Hotel, located in Harpers Ferry, gives a room by room accounting of the contents of a local establishment. This inventory reveals that the room furnishings became plainer and the number of occupants in each room increased on the upper floors in the building.

Several illustrations of officers' quarters located outside of Harpers Ferry provide details about the personal possessions of military officers. These illustrations also indicate the level of sophistication appropriate to the furnishings of an officer's quarters during the 1860s.

FURNISHINGS PLAN (Officer's Quarters)

Overview

Brig. Gen. Edward D. Ramsay reported in his inspection of buildings and stores at Harpers Ferry in 1865 that Building 34/35, a "two story, brick [building], located on Shenandoah Street [was] in fair condition and occupied as quarters for Officers."<sup>1</sup> This is the only site-specific evidence currently known for an officer's quarters in this building. However, the drawing for James Taylor's room in the same building provides very strong comparative evidence. The furnishings plan is based on this drawing, as well as on several illustrations of contemporary officer's quarters located elsewhere.

Interpretive Objectives and Operating Plan

Harpers Ferry NHP will interpret the Civil War military presence in the historically furnished provost marshal's office, located in Building 34. The Soldier's Life exhibit in building 15 illustrates the living conditions of the rank and file soldier. The historically furnished officer's quarters will show a side of military life infrequently seen by visitors--the lodgings of a military officer in private accommodations in a town. The presence of this furnished area can also lead to discussion of the fact that Building 36 next door was the command center for military operations in Harpers Ferry, which is why Building 34/35 was a desirable location for lodgings.

Most visitors will view the room from room 202. Persons with mobility limitations will view the room from room 205.

Concept for Interpretive Panels

The interpretive panel will identify this room as a Civil War era Officer's Quarters, and should point out the contrast between this room and the quarters occupied by the rank and file troops in building 15, represented by the display in the Soldier's Life exhibit. Both displays illustrate that officers and enlisted men tried to make themselves as comfortable as possible while in the field. Two identical freestanding panels will be located in room 204, one near the door to room 202 and one near the door to 205. The doorways to room 204 will be fitted with removable full-length glass or acrylic plastic barriers.

Possible illustrations:

— Officer's Quarters in a Casemate at Fortress Monroe, Virginia, ca.1861-65, figure 44

ILLUSTRATIONS

Illustrations are arranged as follows:

Officer's Quarters, figs. 44-49

As seen here prior to the 1882 renovations, Building 34/35 has three bays, with the door in the left bay. Two trees line the sidewalk in front.

This photograph illustrates the crowded rear yard of buildings 32-35. Note the two-story shed along the rear of the yard, with a railroad car parked alongside.

This photograph illustrates the front of Building 34/35 during the operation of Doran's general store, and depicts the wide range of wares offered for sale. Street numbers are visible over the transom of two of the entry doors.

Figure 5. Floor plan (not to scale) of High Street building in which provost marshal's office was located, Harpers Ferry. Sketch by Krista Copeland, park architect; revised by Steven N. Patricia, illustrator. The sketch postulates the original room layout. Note that there were two rooms, with a fireplace in each room.

Figure 6. Citizens of Charleston, S.C., Taking the Oath of Allegiance Soon After the Evacuation of the City by General Hardee, from The American Soldier in the Civil War, p. 420. Neg. no. 92-27-41&42.

Although the building illustrated is much grander than the office in Harpers Ferry (as evidenced by the carpet on the floor), this lithograph depicting a provost marshal's office offers an excellent example of spatial arrangement for clerks desks, types of desks and chairs, as well as details such as the flag and bibles for taking the oath.

The furnishings and details are more sparse than would have been the case at Harpers Ferry, since the title of this print reveals that it is depicting a situation governed by expediency: the need to administer the oath to thousands of civilians after the evacuation of the city by the confederates.

The interior of this building suggests that it was previously used for commercial purposes, unlike the domestic building in which the Harpers Ferry provost marshal's office was located.

Note that all of the clerks are seated behind one counter/desk, unlike the arrangement shown in figure 6. The Moulton documentary evidence suggests that the Harpers Ferry arrangement was more like the one in figure 6 than this one. Here the interior space is divided by a partition. The room behind the partition was probably used as an office. Note also the stove pipe in the back room and the hats and coats hung on the wall.

Figure 8. Capture of Savannah—General Geary Issuing Passes to Citizens of Savannah, GA, from Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, January 21, 1865, p. 276. Courtesy of the Library of Congress.

The upscale interior and the fact that a general is issuing passes suggest that this was not a provost marshal's office. However, issuing passes was a duty typical of a provost marshal's office.

This exterior photograph of a provost marshal's office in Alexandria, Virginia, shows that it was located in a substantial building with a clearly visible sign in front.

Note the sentry stationed in front and the crowds of people gathering. Although in this case the people may be gathered to pose in the picture, other documentary and pictorial evidence shows that the crowds are typical.

This sketch shows the exterior of a Union provost marshal's office in Winchester, Virginia, in 1864 located in a substantial building, with a flag mounted at the door and people gathered in front.

Taylor claims that this was formerly the "ground floor of a tobacco warehouse," where Taylor stopped to get a pass. Taylor mentions that "about the office door was a group of Blue Coats."

A sign is posted on the front of the building, probably stating that it was the provost marshal's office and the pass room hours.

Exterior of a Union provost marshal's office in a town unlike Harpers Ferry. As is typical, the provost marshal's sign is extremely visible and crowds of people are gathering outside.

Figure 13. Sherman's Campaign—Provost Marshal's Office, Atlanta [Ga.]—Citizens Getting Passes To Go North and South, In Consequence of Gen. Sherman's Order For The Departure of All Citizens, from Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper, October 29, 1864, p. 92. Courtesy of the Library of Congress.

This provost marshal was apparently located in a large building formerly used for domestic purposes. Once again, people are shown crowding around the office, a condition probably exacerbated by the evacuation order.

Figure 14. The Military Authorities at Washington, DC, Examining Passes in 1861, from Frank Leslie's Illustrated History of the Civil War, p. 199. Neg. no. 92-28-42&43.

This drawing probably illustrates the exterior of a provost marshal's office, since examining passes was a provost marshal's duty. Note again the numbers of people congregating outside the building. Also note the awning, a treatment not seen in other pictorial evidence, and the provost marshal's uniform.

THE MILITARY AUTHORITIES AT WASHINGTON, D. C., EXAMINING PASSES IN 1861.

This scene was of frequent occurrence. A gallant volunteer wishes to take a short furlough in order to show his fiancée the wonders of the capital city. The provost marshal is scrutinizing the document with considerable interest, as though he has some latent doubts of its genuineness.

Figure 15. Provost-Marshal's Office, Department of the Cumberland, from Miller, The Photographic History of the Civil War, vol. 7, p. 183.

No flag or sign appears in this exterior photograph, but the sentry stationed at the door is typical. Also typical is the use of a substantial building.

Figure 16. Headquarters of Provost-Marshal-General, Defenses South of the Potomac, from Miller, The Photographic History of the Civil War, vol. 7, p. 201.

Even though this is a provost marshal general's office, it also displays a large, highly visible sign.

Even though this is not a provost marshal's office, it is a good interior sketch of a military office. Especially notable are the type of desk and chair, the placement of the desk and chair against the wall (for privacy and to take advantage of light from the window), the stationery on the desk, and the bench in the front room.

This figure, as well as figures 19 and 20, are good examples of military interiors in domestic settings, illustrating the use of some civilian furnishings. Note also the stationery and writing implements.

APPENDIX B

Excerpt from Quarterly Issues of Stationery, Revised Army Regulations of 1861 (1863), p. 167.

Quartermaster's Department.—Forage.—Straw.

upon his affidavit to the account of expenses, and the certificate of the paymaster that the journey was on duty.

1119. Travel of officers on business of civil works will be charged to the appropriation for the work.

1120. No officer shall have orders to attend personally at Washington to the settlement of his accounts, except by order of the Secretary of War on the report of the bureau, or of the Treasury, showing a necessity therefor.

FORAGE.

1121. The forage ration is fourteen pounds of hay and twelve pounds of oats, corn, or barley. For mules, fourteen pounds of hay and nine pounds of oats, corn, or barley.

1122. The allowance of forage to mounted officers will apply for mules equally as for horses, when the exigencies of the service make it necessary to use the former instead of the latter. This will not authorize officers to make the substitution on drills and parades, or, under ordinary circumstances, on any duty under arms.

1123. Forage shall be issued to officers only in the month when due, and at their proper stations, and for the horses actually kept by them in service, not exceeding in number as follows: In time of war, Major-General, seven horses; Brigadier-General, five; Colonels who have the cavalry allowance, five; other Colonels, four; Lieutenant-Colonels and Majors who have the cavalry allowance, four; other Lieutenant-Colonels and Majors, three; Captains who have the cavalry allowance, three; all other officers entitled to forage, two; and in time of peace, general and field officers, three horses; officers below the rank of field officers in the regiments of dragoons, cavalry, and mounted riflemen, two horses; all other officers entitled to forage, one horse.

1124. No officer shall sell forage issued to him. Forage issued to public horses or cattle is public property; what they do not actually consume is to be properly accounted for.

1125. Whenever the state of the supplies or circumstances of the service make it necessary to issue a part, only, of the ration, in kind, commanding officers will prescribe what part shall be so issued.

STRAW.

1126. In barracks, twelve pounds of straw per month for bedding will be allowed to each man, servant, and company woman.

1127. The allowance and change of straw for the sick is regulated by the surgeon.

1128. One hundred pounds per month is allowed for bedding to each horse in public service.

Quartermaster's Department.—Stationery.

1129. At posts near prairie land owned by the United States, hay will be used instead of straw, and provided by the troops.

Straw not actually used as bedding shall be accounted for as other public property.

STATIONERY

1131. When an officer is relieved in command, he shall transfer the office stationery to his successor.

1132. To each office table is allowed one inkstand, one stamp, one paper-folder, one sand-box, one wafer-box, and as many lead-pencils as may be required, not exceeding four per annum.

U.S. Department of the Interior Mission Statement

As the Nation's principal conservation agency, the Department of the Interior has responsibility for most of our nationally-owned public lands and natural resources. This includes fostering sound use of our land and water resources; protecting our fish, wildlife, and biological diversity; preserving the environmental and cultural values of our national parks and historical places; and providing for the enjoyment of life through outdoor recreation. The Department assesses our energy and mineral resources and works to ensure that their development is in the best interests of all our people by encouraging stewardship and citizen participation in their care. The Department also has a major responsibility for American Indian reservation communities and for people who live in island territories under U.S. administration.
