National Park Service U.S. Department of the Interior

The National Park Service, of the Department of the Interior, administers areas of national significance to our natural and cultural heritage.

There are a variety of National Park Service areas in Florida. The diversity is reflected in the titles given to them: national seashore, national memorial, national monument, national preserve and national park.

EVERGLADES NATIONAL PARK is the largest of the National Park Service areas in Florida -- more than 1.4 million acres.

This natural park is the largest remaining subtropical wilderness in the coterminous United States. It has extensive areas of fresh water and salt water, open Everglades prairies and mangrove forests. Its abundant wildlife include rare and colorful birds.

Congress authorized Everglades National Park on May 30, 1934. In November 1978, Congress designated 1.3 million acres of Everglades National Park as wilderness.

Reacting to the need to keep Everglades National Park in ecological balance, Congress authorized BIG CYPRESS NATIONAL PRESERVE October 11, 1974.

This large preserve adjoins the northwest section of Everglades National Park. Its 570,000 acres provide a fresh-water supply crucial to the Everglades' survival.

Subtropical plant and animal life abound in this ancestral home of the Seminole and Miccosukee Indians.

Unlike other National Park Service areas, hunting, fishing and trapping of game animals are permitted to the extent these activities do not jeopardize the natural value of Big Cypress National Preserve.

A national monument is intended to preserve at least one nationally significant resource. It is usually smaller than a national park and lacks its diversity of attractions.

Typically, many national monuments have been established by Presidential Proclamation. FORT JEFFERSON NATIONAL MONUMENT was proclaimed January 4, 1935.

Located in the Dry Tortugas (68 miles west of Key West), Fort Jefferson is the largest all-masonry fortification in the Western World. It was begun in 1856 to help control the Florida Straits; it served as a federal military prison before and after the Civil War.

The monument's more than 64,000 acres are home for diverse bird and marine life.

Fort Jefferson is administered by Everglades National Park.

BISCAYNE NATIONAL PARK is 96% reef and water. Its 175,000 acres include about 32 keys (islands), that form a chain from Key Biscayne on the north to Key Largo on the south.

Congress authorized Biscayne National Monument October 18, 1968, and redesignated it Biscayne National Park June 28, 1980.

In northeast Florida are two historic forts that were proclaimed national monuments October 15, 1924. Initially the War Department administered these national monuments. Then in 1933, both were transferred to the National Park Service.

CASTILLO DE SAN MARCOS NATIONAL MONUMENT preserves the principal fortification of the defenses of Spanish St. Augustine, the first permanent European settlement in the continental United States. The Castillo was built in 1672-95 and "modernized" in the 18th Century. Seeing Castillo brings to mind the Spanish presence in the Southeastern United States.

Originally Fort Marion National Monument, the 20-acre site was renamed Castillo de San Marcos National Monument in June, 1942.

FORT MATANZAS NATIONAL MONUMENT is 14 miles south of St. Augustine and covers 298 acres.

This Spanish fort was built in 1740-42 to control access to St. Augustine's flank.

In 1565, this area was named Matanzas, meaning "slaughters", because 245 Frenchmen were killed by the Spaniards there. These Frenchmen had challenged Spanish dominion.

FORT CAROLINE NATIONAL MEMORIAL commemorates the first major French attempt at settlement within the present United States. The fort replica walls overlook the original site of the French Huguenot colony of 1564-65. The French and Spanish began two centuries of European colonial rivalry in North America here.

Congress authorized this memorial of 131 acres September 21, 1950. It is along the St. Johns River, 10 miles east of Jacksonville.

A portion of Florida's Atlantic coastline is preserved at CANAVERAL NATIONAL SEASHORE midway between Jacksonville and West Palm Beach. The national seashore was established by Congress January 3, 1975.

Canaveral National Seashore offers a great variety of wildlife, including many species of birds, on a segment of largely undeveloped wildlands (about 57,000 acres).

The national seashore includes a portion of Merritt Island National Wildlife Refuge, which is administered by the Fish and Wildlife Service, U.S. Department of Interior.

Near the gulf coast of Florida, DE SOTO NATIONAL MEMORIAL commemorates the landing of Spanish explorer, Hernando de Soto in 1539. De Soto's expedition was the first extensive exploration by Europeans of what is now the southern United States.

De Soto National Memorial, authorized March 11, 1948, covers 30 acres along Tampa Bay, west of Bradenton.

Several offshore islands and a key (island) with historic ruins are preserved at GULF ISLANDS NATIONAL SEASHORE along the northwest Florida and Mississippi gulf coast.

Mainland features of Gulf Islands National Seashore include bayous, historic military forts and a portion of a Naval Live Oaks Reservation.

Congress authorized this 139,776 acre national seashore January 8, 1971. Two of the Mississippi offshore islands were designated as wilderness in 1978.

Payment in Lieu of Taxes

The National Park Service participates in the "Payment in Lieu of Taxes Program" (Public Law 94-565). Under this Act the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to pay as much as 75 cents an acre minus some deductions to counties for once private lands that have been acquired or donated for park purposes.
