Certified Local Governments in the National Historic Preservation Program

UNIVERSITY OF GEORGIA

OCT 30 1986

Benefits of Becoming A Certified Local Government

- Special grants from State Historic Preservation Officers
- Local historic preservation expertise recognized by State and Federal agencies
- Technical assistance and training from State Historic Preservation Officers
- Participation in nominations to the National Register of Historic Places
- National historic preservation assistance network: publications, professional assistance
- Information exchange with State Historic Preservation Officers
- Participation in statewide preservation programs and planning

Responsibilities of a Certified Local Government

- Maintain a historic preservation commission
- Survey local historic properties
- Enforce State or local preservation laws
- Provide for public participation
- Other functions delegated or required by the State, such as the enactment of historic preservation ordinances or zoning restrictions

What is a Certified Local Government?

The National Historic Preservation Act established a nationwide program of financial and technical assistance to preserve historic properties—buildings, structures, sites, neighborhoods, and other places of importance in the historical and cultural life of the nation. A local government can participate directly in this program when the State Historic Preservation Officer certifies that the local government has established its own historic preservation commission and a program meeting Federal and State standards. A local government that receives such certification is known as a “Certified Local Government” or “CLG.”

What are the Benefits of Becoming a Certified Local Government?

Certified Local Governments are eligible to apply for especially earmarked grants from their State Historic Preservation Officer. At least ten percent of the annual Historic Preservation Fund grant made to States under the National Historic Preservation Act must be distributed among Certified Local Governments.

Certified Local Governments are recognized by Federal and State agencies as having special expertise in historic preservation.

Certified Local Governments receive technical assistance and training from their State Historic Preservation Offices. Such training and assistance can help a community pursue its preservation goals and its plans for development.

Certified Local Governments review nominations of properties within their jurisdictions to the National Register of Historic Places before such nominations are submitted to the State Historic Preservation Officer. This provides for formal local participation in the identification and national recognition of their historic resources.

Motor Mill, Clayton County, Iowa (courtesy of Iowa State Historic Preservation Office, Iowa State Historical Department).

Certified Local Governments become part of a national technical assistance network. They receive publications issued by their State Historic Preservation Office and by the National Park Service. They know who in the State Historic Preservation Office to call upon for assistance, and how to obtain aid from National Park Service offices such as the National Register, Technical Preservation Services, Historic American Buildings Survey, and the Historic American Engineering Record.

Representatives from Certified Local Governments are provided the opportunity to meet periodically with their State Historic Preservation Office, sharing experience and information.

Certified Local Governments provide local perspective to the plans and programs of their State Historic Preservation Offices, including statewide planning for preservation and development.

Why should a local government participate in the Certified Local Government Program?

Obtaining status as a Certified Local Government can help a local government encourage, develop, and maintain its local preservation efforts in coordination with its development plans.

No one benefits as much from the preservation of local historic sites and buildings nor suffers as much by their destruction as the citizens of a community. It is they who live and work in historic homes and neighborhoods, who see the effects of rehabilitation projects every day, and who enjoy the economic and social benefits that rehabilitation of the community's historic properties bring. It is they who feel most personally the loss of a treasured local landmark.

Each historic building and structure represents a community investment that should not be discarded lightly; maintaining and rehabilitating older buildings and neighborhoods can mean savings in time, money, and raw materials. The preservation of a community's historical resources will enrich the lives of its inhabitants now and in the future.

What sorts of resources must be present in a community to make it eligible to become a Certified Local Government?

The national historic preservation program is concerned with preserving the integrity of properties significant in American history, architecture, engineering, archeology, and culture. Properties significant to the history, prehistory, architecture or culture of local communities are specifically included. A community's historic resources might include a vital ethnic neighborhood, a Queen Anne residence, a block of nineteenth century warehouses or stores, a 1930s bungalow, a park, a group of farms in their rural landscape, a shipwreck in a harbor, or the archeological remains of an early historic commercial district or a prehistoric Indian village. In short, the national historic preservation program is interested in preserving the integrity of the history of all localities—regardless of what that history is.

What kinds of projects can be funded by grants to Certified Local Governments?

Many kinds of projects can be assisted by State grants to Certified Local Governments. Some examples are:

- survey and inventory of historic buildings and other historic features of a community such as parks, fences, roads, and bridges
- survey of local prehistoric and historic archeological resources
- preparation of nominations of local properties to the National Register of Historic Places.

- activities related to comprehensive community planning such as:
  - providing staff support for a Certified Local Government's historic preservation commission
  - developing published design guidelines for use by historic preservation commissions in Certified Local Governments in their review of new construction and alterations to properties within historic districts
  - writing or amending preservation ordinances
  - preparing preservation plans for the protection of local historic resources
- testing archeological sites to determine their significance
- programs for public education in historic preservation such as:
  - preparing and producing exhibits and brochures concerning local historical resources and their protection and the activities of the historic preservation commission
  - preparing special events that educate the public about local history, the community's historic resources, and preservation issues.

Can Certified Local Governments apply for funds from their State Historic Preservation Officer other than funds specifically earmarked for the Certified Local Governments?

Bradley Building, Cleveland, Ohio (Cleveland Landmarks Commission).

Yes, but so can other governments that are not Certified Local Governments, as well as non-governmental institutions, organizations, and individuals. Status as a Certified Local Government gives local governments an advantage in the competition for scarce funds as their programs are already coordinated with their State Historic Preservation Office.

What is the National Register of Historic Places, and what is the involvement of Certified Local Governments in the process of nominating and reviewing nominations to it?

The National Register is a working list of properties determined to be of national, State, or local significance and worthy of preservation and consideration in planning or development decisions. The National Register is maintained by the National Park Service in Washington, D.C.

Fredrick, Maryland (Harriet Wise).

Properties are listed in the National Register primarily through nominations by State Historic Preservation Officers. The significance of potential entries in the National Register are reviewed against established criteria. These criteria, established by the National Park Service, are worded in a flexible manner to provide for the diversity of resources across the country. Sources of further information concerning the National Register are listed at the end of this booklet.

Certified Local Governments participate in the National Register nomination process by reviewing all nominations of properties in their jurisdictions. Before a property within the jurisdiction of a Certified Local Government may be nominated by the State Historic Preservation Officer for inclusion on the National Register, the State Historic Preservation Officer must notify the local historic preservation commission, the chief elected official, and the owner of the property. After providing opportunity for public comment, the historic preservation commission can prepare a report as to whether or not, in its opinion, the property meets the criteria of the National Register. Subject to appeal, if both the chief elected official and the local historic preservation commission recommend that the property not be nominated to the National Register, the State Historic Preservation Officer can take no further action on its nomination. The property may, however, be formally determined eligible for the National Register, even though it may not be nominated, to ensure that Federal agencies will consider it if Federal assistance or a Federal license is involved in projects that will affect it.

How does listing on the National Register benefit Certified Local Governments?

National Register listing can enrich local preservation efforts by publicly establishing that local properties are significant enough to merit national recognition.

Federal tax law provides incentives for the preservation of properties listed on the National Register or included within registered historic districts. Investment tax credits are provided for the substantial rehabilitation of certified historic structures, and tax deductions are permitted for the contribution of easements on historic properties to qualified entities. Current information on Federal tax incentives can be obtained from your State Historic Preservation Officer, or from the National Park Service's Regional Office in your area. Your State Historic Preservation Officer can also provide information on State incentives for the preservation of historic properties.

The National Register is central to a number of Federal programs that encourage protection and improvement of historic properties. A description of several such programs that may be of use to local governments can be found in Appendix II of the revised National Park Service publication, Guidelines for Local Survey: A Basis for Preservation Planning.

National Register status, or a determination that a property is eligible for the National Register, identifies a property as one whose historical value must be considered in planning by Federal agencies and by communities using Community Development Block Grants and other forms of Federal assistance. These agencies and communities are required by the National Historic Preservation Act to obtain the comments of the State Historic Preservation Officer and the Advisory Council on Historic Preservation on the effects of their projects. Further information on the Advisory Council can be obtained from the sources listed at the end of this booklet.

What is a Certified Local Government required to do?

The National Historic Preservation Act requires that a Certified Local Government:

- enforce State or local legislation for the designation and protection of historic properties,
- establish and maintain a qualified historic preservation commission,
- maintain a system for the survey and inventory of historic properties in coordination with its State Historic Preservation Office,
- provide for public participation in its activities, and

- perform other agreed upon functions delegated to it by its State Historic Preservation Officer.

Local preservation ordinance

Many States require local governments to enact historic preservation ordinances as a condition of certification. The requirements of such legislation vary widely. For example, some States require that local governments have the authority to establish historic districts which are protected by zoning restrictions. Other States require the delineation of historic districts but do not require local zoning ordinances.

The National Park Service encourages the enactment of local preservation legislation for the protection and designation of historic properties. Several publications that detail some common issues concerning local preservation ordinances are listed in the publications section below. To find out the policy of your State regarding local ordinances, contact your State Historic Preservation Officer.

Historic Preservation Commissions

Many communities already have historic preservation commissions that designate historic structures, sites, and districts in accordance with criteria established by the ordinances under whose authority they operate. Usually these commissions also have the authority to review proposed changes to designated buildings and structures and the design of new construction near historic buildings or within historic districts. The degree of authority granted to such commissions varies widely; some commissions are basically advisory bodies, while others have the power to control alteration or prohibit the demolition of designated properties.

To participate as a Certified Local Government, a local government must establish a historic preservation commission according to State or local law, and give the commission responsibilities and authorities coordinated with those of the State Historic Preservation Officer.

What is a historic preservation commission required to do?

Historic preservation commissions of Certified Local Governments are established in coordination with State Historic Preservation Office procedures. They are designed to meet the needs of individual communities and to complement the preservation program administered by the State Historic Preservation Officer. All historic preservation commissions of Certified Local Governments review nominations of local resources to the National Register.

Some States require that commissions review and make decisions on alteration or demolition of designated historic properties, and that they establish and use written guidelines for their review. In other States, such reviews are optional. In others, the primary activity of a local historic preservation commission is defined by the State as educating the citizens within its jurisdiction about historic preservation. To find out what is required of local historic preservation commissions in the Certified Local Government program in your State, contact your State Historic Preservation Officer.

Who is qualified to serve on historic preservation commissions of the Certified Local Governments?

National Park Service regulations define an "adequate and qualified" historic preservation review commission as one in which all members have demonstrated interest, competence, or knowledge in historic preservation. The regulations say that professionals from among the fields of architecture, history, architectural history, planning, archeology, or some historic preservation disciplines, such as urban planning, American Studies, American Civilization, cultural geography, or cultural anthropology, should be appointed to the commission to the extent available in the community.

The kinds of expertise needed on historic preservation review commissions will vary to some extent with the nature of local historic properties. For example, if a community was once the site of significant developments in prehistory, it would be well to include a prehistoric archeologist. If a community contains many buildings representing different architectural styles and periods, the presence of an architectural historian on the commission would be important.

Union National Bank, Eau Claire, Wisconsin (Mary Taylor).

What if there are no professionals in the fields recommended by the regulations who live in a community or are willing to serve on a historic preservation commission?

The regulations for Certified Local Governments stipulate only that all members of a local historic preservation commission must have demonstrated interest, competence, or knowledge of historic preservation. Certified Local Governments are required to appoint professionals from the disciplines listed to the extent available in the community. However, subject to some restrictions, each State may specify the minimum number and type of professional members that the local government must appoint to its commission. If a local government is certified with a historic preservation commission lacking the full range of professional expertise required by the regulations, the State must require that the community obtain specific expertise as necessary. For example, if a historic preservation commission is to consider a prehistoric archeological site for nomination to the National Register, and the commission has no member with expertise in that field, the State must require that it consult with a professional prehistoric archeologist before its decision is forwarded to the State Historic Preservation Officer.

McLoughlin Historic District, Oregon City, Oregon
