PREFACE

The compilation of historical data for Harpers Ferry National Historical Park is a continuing collaborative effort. The ongoing indexing of information in Jefferson County census and property records and newspapers arranged through a cooperative agreement with the University of Maryland continues to be a truly invaluable aid in the preparation of Historic Furnishings Reports for this park. The University of Maryland historians Patricia Chickering, Michael A. Jenkins, Mary Johnson, and John Barker provided the historic furnishings office with copies of their database and gave me innumerable leads. The availability of this database significantly decreased the amount of time normally required to complete a historic furnishings report.

The historians also included me in their interviews with Mrs. Isabel Flanagan, Frederick Roeder's great-granddaughter. Mrs. Flanagan has been a treasure trove of information about Harpers Ferry during the early twentieth century and I am indebted to her for generously sharing with us her knowledge and her scrapbooks of Harpers Ferry clippings and photographs.

ADMINISTRATIVE DATA

LOCATION AND PROPOSED USE

Harpers Ferry National Historical Park (originally called Harpers Ferry National Monument) was established by Congress in 1944 to be "a public memorial commemorating historical events at or near Harpers Ferry" (Public Law 386). Although earliest efforts focused on restoring and interpreting buildings within the park to the 1859-65 period, the Interpretive Prospectus, approved in 1980, states that "the period of historic restoration has been extended to encompass the entire nineteenth century."¹

The Interpretive Prospectus states that "the confectionery, owned by the Frederick Roeder family, will be a good place to interpret the Civil War impact on the town. Roeder was killed as he walked on a town street, by sniper fire from troops on the heights. The baking equipment was used to prepare bread for soldiers of occupying forces."² Building 16, Frederick Roeder's home and confectionery shop, thus directly addresses the Civil War theme of Harpers Ferry National Historical Park. Roeder's life and death gives interpreters a direct window onto events in Harpers Ferry during the war. The historic furnishing of Roeder's parlor and shop will allow the interpretation of a middle class household and family business. Since the Roeders had many children, the parlor also provides an opportunity to discuss the raising and pastimes of children, their changing responsibilities as they grew older, and the role of women, both mothers and older daughters, in the efficient functioning of a town household.

This Historic Furnishings Report provides an alternative furnishings plan for the Roeder parlor which interprets the space as it would have been used by Col. De Witt Clinton Baxter of the 72nd Pennsylvania Zouaves. Colonel Baxter probably occupied building 16 as his headquarters and post office in February and March of 1862. This alternative furnishings scenario dovetails with the Soldier's Life exhibit next door in building 15, an exhibit which interprets the daily life of the soldiers under the command of Colonel Baxter. This alternative plan also complements the interpretation of the military presence in Harpers Ferry that is presented in the Provost Marshal's Office. When the parlor in building 16 is furnished as Colonel Baxter's headquarters the confectionery shop should be closed, since the shop would not have functioned in the absence of the Roeders.

According to the Interpretive Prospectus, "the tavern, in its nearby location, would have been much frequented by armory workers and this would be an appropriate place to discuss the types of workers and their lifestyles."³ This interpretation addresses the major park theme of industrial history. Armory Superintendents believed that the row of gin shops lining the alley next to the Armory (that later became Potomac Street) were detrimental to the morals of their workers, not to mention potential fire traps that threatened the armory itself.⁴ The interpretation of White Hall Tavern can explore the complex relationship between the government and the town in pre-war Harpers Ferry, as well as the social customs and working habits of early industrial laborers.

INTERPRETIVE OBJECTIVES FOR BUILDING 16

Frederick Roeder's house will be used to interpret the Civil War's impact on the town both in an indirect and a direct way. In the indirect way, Roeder's parlor and confectionery will be refurnished as it looked during the earliest part of the Civil War. Interpreters can use this exhibit to discuss the dangers to both life and property endured by Harpers Ferry townspeople during the war. At various times throughout the war, local people faced the fear of death and injury, the need to flee to safety at a moment's notice, and the pillage and confiscation of property.

The parlor and confectionery can also be used to interpret a middle class household and family business. Until his untimely death, Frederick Roeder lived the American dream. Roeder immigrated to the United States from Germany, practiced the trade he learned in his native land, and died fairly well off. His business interests extended well beyond the confectionery, into real estate and money-lending. Since Roeder had a large family, the parlor also allows for the interpretation of the raising and pastimes of children and of a discussion of the role of women, both mothers and older daughters, in the running of an efficient household and business.

The Roeder parlor can be used to interpret the Civil War in a more direct way when it is furnished as Colonel Baxter's headquarters. Colonel Baxter probably occupied building 16 in spring of 1862. Interpreters can use the headquarters to discuss specifically the defense of Harpers Ferry in 1862, and more generally the planning and organization of various military campaigns throughout the war. The interpretation of building 16 should be linked with the Soldier's Life exhibit in building 15, since the Zouaves that occupied building 15 were under Colonel Baxter's command. Interpreters can also draw attention to the large quantity of graffiti found on the walls of buildings 5 and 7, which were also occupied by the 72nd Pennsylvania.

OPERATING PLAN FOR BUILDING 16

Roeder's parlor and confectionery may be staffed occasionally during some special events, but will usually be unstaffed. A removable barrier will be provided for each room to allow them to be viewed by visitors while unstaffed. The Park may choose to interpret the parlor as Colonel Baxter's headquarters during the late winter and early spring, and as Roeder's parlor the rest of the year. Colonel Baxter's headquarters may be staffed during other special events. When the parlor in building 16 is interpreted as Colonel Baxter's headquarters, the confectionery shop should be closed, since the shop would not have been operating when Baxter was in residence. Formal or informal visitor surveys can help the Park to determine the best mix of interpretation for building 16. In any case, free-standing interpretive panels will be provided to explain each of the rooms when they are unstaffed. Building 16 will be open to visitors during regular park operating hours.

INTERPRETIVE OBJECTIVES FOR BUILDING 7

The furnished exhibit in building 7 is designed to portray a working class drinking house in the 1850s. Interpreters can use this exhibit to discuss the social customs and working habits of the armory workers, as well as the complex symbiotic relationship between the government and the town. The armory was the major employer in pre-Civil War Harpers Ferry. The armory depended on the town to supply labor and the town relied on the armory for its prosperity. However, the gin shops lining the alley which would become Potomac Street were a constant irritation to the armory superintendents because of their perceived bad effect on the morals of the workers and of the actual threat of fire they posed to the armory buildings.

OPERATING PLAN FOR BUILDING 7

White Hall Tavern will generally be unstaffed, but the plan provides for the ability to staff the exhibit and allow full access to visitors. When the building is unstaffed, the exhibit case will be pulled up to the single door and latched into place. Visitors will view the exhibit from the sidewalk. The double doors will be open and a curved glass or plexiglass barrier will be latched into place on the inside. Both the exhibit case and the barrier will be on casters so that they can easily be moved out of the way when the building is closed for the night, and moved into place when the building is opened in the morning.

When the building is staffed, the curved glass barrier will be removed from the room and the visitors can gather in the unfurnished southern half of the room. The exhibit case can be installed in the single door or removed entirely, whichever seems to work best for the visitors. Leaving the exhibit case in place has the advantage of giving the visitors an introduction to the site before they enter it and would not be very visually intrusive on the inside. When staffed, the two-dimensional figures will be removed. Extra reproduction chairs and tables will be ordered so that the park can fully furnish the space occasionally if the need arises.

Whether staffed or unstaffed, those visitors who are mobility impaired will contact the ranger staff for an escorted tour of building 7. A wheelchair accessible path will be constructed around the building and wheelchair bound visitors and their companions will be escorted by a ranger through the door in the east or rear facade of the building.

HISTORICAL DATA

ANALYSIS OF HISTORIC OCCUPANCY

Construction and Pre-Civil War Use of Buildings 16 and 7

Building 16 was built by November 1844, either by John Wilson or by Frederick Roeder for use as a residence. The original building was a stone, two-story, three-room structure with a gable roof.⁵ Although it may have been originally occupied by Wilson, Frederick Roeder and his family lived there by at least 1844. Frederick Roeder was a confectioner, born September 12, 1810, who emigrated from Germany prior to 1834. His wife Mary A., was ten years younger. The Roeders had four children in 1850: Mary L., age seven; Matilda, age five; Augustus H., age three; and James R., age one. Mary Gardner, age 16, possibly a female servant, also lived with the Roeder family in 1850.⁶ Roeder was a prominent Harpers Ferry businessman who frequently served on the town council between 1851 and 1860.⁷ Joseph Barry, Harpers Ferry historian, described Roeder as one of the sternest Union men in the whole land and...one of the first men in the State of Virginia who dared to express sympathy with the Republican party. Mr. Roeder was a native of Saxony, but he had resided for many years at Harper's Ferry, where he was very much respected and where by industry he had accumulated a considerable property. He was very much opposed to slavery....⁸

Roeder apparently acquired enough capital to enable him to lend money to other local residents, perhaps accumulating more capital in the process.⁹

Probably in 1848-49, but definitely before 1856, Roeder added a two-story addition to the west end of building 16. This addition encroached three feet onto Wager lot

17, which Roeder had purchased in 1848.¹⁰ Roeder may have also built his bakery, building 16A, at this time. Building 16A was definitely built before 1861, since it was used by Civil War soldiers as a bakery.¹¹ It is not known what Roeder used for a bakery before he built 16A. He may have rented ovens elsewhere in town. Roeder's last improvement to the property occurred around 1856-57, but certainly before 1861, when he added 1 1/2 stories to building 16.¹²

William and Samuel Anderson probably constructed building 7 about 1839 as a warehouse for their dry goods store in building 11. On November 16, 1837, the Andersons and George Stephenson advertised in the Virginia Free Press for bids from carpenters and masons to erect buildings 11 and 12 and "Also two stone houses, each 24 by 40 feet, with cellars, one of them to be one [building 7], and the other two stories [building 15] high--all to be covered with slate."¹³ Frederick Roeder purchased building 7 in 1847; the deed describes the property as "certain warehouse property, including the ground the said warehouse stands upon."¹⁴ Charles Snell, author of the 1980 Historic Structure Report on building 7, assumes that building 7 was built to serve building 11 since the Andersons operated a store there.¹⁵ For all or part of the period between 1847 and 1855, building 7 was used as a drinking house or tavern. The original facade was probably painted white prior to 1855, when the building was described as "a two-story stone house occupied now as a Dwelling and Warehouse, and formerly as a Drinking House known as the 'White Hall'."¹⁶

In 1856, Roeder sold the front part of building 7 to the government, which demolished and removed the front half in order to widen the alley that would become Potomac Street. Roeder then added a new facade to building 7.¹⁷ From 1855-61, building 7 was probably used as a dwelling and warehouse.¹⁸

Buildings 16 and 7 during the Civil War

By 1860, Frederick and Anna Roeder had seven children: Mary L., 17; Matilda E., 15; Augustus H., 13; James A. [sic], 11; Emma A., eight; Albert T., three; and Julia A., one.¹⁹ Barely a year later, the family was struck by a double tragedy. Anna Roeder died March 23, 1861.²⁰ Less than four months later, on July 4, 1861, Frederick Roeder was shot by a sniper. James Barry described Roeder's unfortunate end:

When the confederates had retired Mr. F.A. Roeder walked towards the railroad office and, while he was sauntering about, a shot was fired from the Maryland side of the Potomac, which inflicted a mortal wound on him, of which he died in half an hour. It is known that the bullet was discharged at Mr. Ambrose Cross who, also, was on the railroad at the time....The shot missed the object at which it was directed and, striking the end of Fouke's hotel, it glanced and hit Mr. Roeder, who, unfortunately, happened to be then coming 'round the corner of that building. The bullet tore a ghastly hole in his groin through which his intestines protruded. He managed to reach his home unassisted--for there was scarcely an able-bodied man then at the place--when death soon released him from his sufferings. Little did the slayer know and little, perhaps, would he care if he knew--that...his bullet proved fatal to one of the first men in the State of Virginia who dared to express sympathy with the Republican party....It is singular that ...the first who lost his life at Harper's Ferry at the hands of the union army was a warm friend to the government and one who would have sacrificed, if necessary, all the property he possessed to preserve the union of the states.²¹

Frederick Roeder's eldest daughter and her husband took the younger children into Maryland shortly afterward. In their absence, building 16 was occupied as a military headquarters and possibly as a post office for some period of time between July 1861 and March 1862. During some of that time, probably in February and March 1862, Colonel Baxter of the 72nd Pennsylvania Regiment

(the Philadelphia Fire Zouaves) used the building as his headquarters.²² Many years later, the descendants of Frederick Roeder attempted to claim restitution from the U.S. Government for the use and abuse of their buildings in Harpers Ferry. The testimony that was gathered from family and friends to support their claim describes the way that the buildings were used during the early part of the war. James R. Roeder, Frederick Roeder's son, testified that the Union army used three houses and a bakery belonging to my father's estate. The home place--a brick building--was used for the post office and officers' headquarters....Colonel Baxter of the 72nd Penn. Fire Zouaves occupied the home building....They took possession not quite a month after my father died, July 4, 1861. I could not say for sure but I think they remained there that winter.

John J. Kern, Mary Roeder's husband, stated that they were all used by Colonel Baxter's Zouaves. The large brick building on Washington street was used for a post-office and offices....They took possession shortly after Mr. Roeder was killed. The children had all been taken over into Maryland. Their mother was dead and there was no one to take care of them. They held it continuously until Baxter left and they used them off and on during the entire war. I think Baxter left sometime in the spring of 1862....They used the main building for a post-office but I do not know who was postmaster. One of them was Billy Wall.

Mary L. Kern, Roeder's daughter, said

our father was killed July 4, 1861, and the troops took possession of the house that month. They gave up the home building and we took possession in March, 1862....They occupied our home building for a post-office and officers quarters....I think it was Colonel Baxter who had control of the home house....²³

Building 7 was used by the 72nd Pennsylvania Regiment as a stable and for storage. James R. Roeder remarked that "They used the lower part for horses and had forage in the upper part....They took possession not quite a month after my father died, July 4, 1861." Mary L. Kern added that "The other two [buildings 5 and 7] they used after that at different times during the war. They were brick buildings....The Potomac street buildings [were used] for stables and warehouses for storing feed etc."²⁴

²³ Claims of the Estate of Frederick A. Roeder.

²⁴ Ibid.

Since Colonel Baxter did not organize the 72nd Pennsylvania Regiment until August 1861, the buildings must have been occupied in July by troops under the command of General Patterson. It is possible that since the Roeders apparently fled to Maryland before the military took over their property and since Baxter was there in March 1862 when the Roeders came back, they simply assumed that he had been there all the time. In fact, Harpers Ferry was unoccupied by any military force from August 17, 1861 to February 25, 1862.²⁵

When the Kerns and the Roeder children returned to Harpers Ferry in March of 1862, they took possession of a ransacked building 16. John J. Kern claimed that the buildings were in good condition when the U.S. first took possession, and he always kept them in good repair. They were in a bad condition when the U.S. left them. The windows had been taken out and removed to Camp Hill to build quarters with. I guess it would have cost $1000.00 at that time to restore the buildings to the condition in which they were before the U.S. authorities used the same.²⁶

Even today, many walls in buildings 5, 7, and 15, all of which were occupied by Baxter's troops, are covered in graffiti.

The Roeders' suffering was not limited to military action alone:

It was sad to see the rapid demoralization[sic] of the people at this time and the various phases of corrupt human nature suddenly brought to light by the war. Not only were the government buildings ransacked for plunder, but the abandoned houses of the citizens shared the same fate. Even women and children could be encountered at all hours of the day and night loaded with booty or trundling wheelbarrows freighted with all imaginable kinds of portable goods and household furniture. In many instances their shamelessness was astounding and it appeared as if they considered that a state of war gave unlimited privilege for plunder. Citizens who recognized their property in the hands of those marauders and claimed it, were abused and sometimes beaten and, sadder yet to be related, women were in many instances, most prominent in those disgraceful scenes.²⁷

²⁷ Barry, The Strange Story of Harper's Ferry, p. 109.

When an inventory was finally taken of Frederick Roeder's estate after the war, only $230.75 worth of personal property was enumerated.²⁸ The goods listed seem incomplete and of poor quality for so prosperous a merchant, probably due to the pillaging of the house during the war by civilians and soldiers.

The Kerns and Roeders may have been living for some time before or after 1862 with the Schusters, relatives of John Kern who lived in Bolivar.²⁹ It is not clear whether building 16 would have been livable immediately after it was vacated by the army.

After the Civil War

By the end of the war, the Kern-Roeder family were again living in building 16, and they continued to live there until 1881. In 1870, the Kern family consisted of John J. Kern, his wife [Mary] Louisa, and their three children: Mary E., age seven; John A., age five; and Annie, age one. Also possibly living with the family were Phillip Gardner, age 29, a wheelwright, and the rest of the Roeder children: Herman R. [Augustus?], age 22; Matilda E., age 23; James R., age 20; Amelia, age 17; Albert T., age 14; and Julia A., age 10.³⁰

John J. Kern pursued a variety of occupations during these years, including running an oyster and ale restaurant, a catering business, and an ice cream saloon. There is no evidence that any of these businesses was located in building 16. In 1865, the Virginia Free Press reported that John J. Kern & Co. had fitted up the popular restaurant on High Street formerly owned by George Clute, and was selling oysters, ale, and cigars. It supplied oysters "by the plate, or can, or otherwise."³¹ That same year, Kern and Goldstein prepared the supper for a Bolivar Heights ball.³² The Spirit of Jefferson on May 30, 1871, commended Kern's "Ice Cream Saloon" on High Street.³³ Kern also continued in his father-in-law's occupation as a confectioner, famous for large, decorated cakes, wedding cakes, and for strawberry shortcake.³⁴ James R. Roeder was granted a liquor license in 1872 and may have run a tavern in either building 5 or building 7.³⁵

Sale of Building 16 and Subsequent Use

In 1880, building 16 housed Jacob J. Kern,³⁶ his wife Mary L., and their children, Mary E., age 16; Annie, age nine; George, age seven; William, age six; Eugene, age three; and Frederick, age less than one. Listed immediately after the Kerns in the census as occupying a separate dwelling house and as a separate family are James Roeder, his wife Mary C., and their children: Mattie, age six; Jessie, age four; and Frederick, age one, and James' nephew, James Allen, age 15.³⁷

In 1881, John J. Kern, acting as administrator of Frederick Roeder's estate, sold Wager lot 16, containing buildings 5 and 16, to Bridget Burleigh.³⁸ The Burleigh family, originally consisting of Bridget, her son Thomas, and his wife and daughter, lived in building 16 until at least 1920.³⁹ The building was used as a residence at least until 1933.⁴⁰

Thomas J. Burleigh was elected constable in 1880, in 1884, and in 1892.⁴¹ In 1882, he was shot in the face while searching a house for stolen goods.⁴²

The first record of Thomas J. Burleigh acquiring a liquor license for retailing liquor at Harpers Ferry appeared in the newspaper in 1885.⁴³ Burleigh continued to hold liquor licenses for the next six years.⁴⁴ Liquor licenses were normally granted in May of each year. Although Thomas Burleigh was granted a license in May of 1891, George Longerbeam was granted a license in November of the same year to sell liquor retail in Harpers Ferry in the Burleigh building, possibly building 5.⁴⁵ Perhaps Burleigh asked Longerbeam to take over his business for some reason lost to the historical record. The newspaper does not list Thomas Burleigh as acquiring another liquor license until ten years later, in 1901. However, the Spirit of Jefferson reports in 1899 that Burleigh shot William "Man Eater" Smith after Smith threw a rock into Burleigh's saloon.⁴⁶

Thomas J. Burleigh was active in town politics and in local business. He was elected mayor in 1896,⁴⁷ and councilman 13 of the following 23 years.⁴⁸ Thomas Burleigh was involved in the Bank of Harpers Ferry as a member of Board of Directors and as an officer, including Vice-President and President, for more than 30 years.⁴⁹

Burleigh sustained $500 worth of losses in the 1889 flood.⁵⁰ Another tragedy occurred less than a year later when Burleigh's wife, Mattie, died at the age of 35.⁵¹ Burleigh remarried ca.1891 to Mary. Thomas and Mary lost their third child Marie in 1904.⁵² Also in 1904, Thomas's second oldest child Nellie married

Dr. Irwin H. McConnell.⁵³ Only five years later, McConnell died. McConnell had practiced medicine in Harpers Ferry for about a year, then had been medical examiner for the YMCA in Washington, D.C. and surgeon for the B&O railroad.⁵⁴

The Burleigh household grew considerably by 1900. Besides Thomas and his wife Mary, seven Burleigh children, Thomas' sister-in-law Myrtle Stoutzenburger, and a female boarder named Ella Henricks all lived in building 16.⁵⁵ By 1910, only five Burleigh children lived in building 16, together with Thomas' brother-in-law Henry C. Stoutzenburger and a servant, Ab Marshall.⁵⁶

In 1920, Thomas and his wife had seven children living with them again.⁵⁷ Apparently, over the years these overcrowded conditions prompted the Burleighs to make some changes inside the house. By the late teens and 20s the Burleighs had divided the large room on the main floor into a parlor and a small bedroom. Also, Thomas Jr. may have lived upstairs in building 5.⁵⁸

After 1901, Burleigh was again granted a series of yearly retail liquor licenses until 1913.⁵⁹ Albert Thornton was accused of breaking into Burleigh's saloon and taking money and whiskey in 1904.⁶⁰ In 1905, Burleigh operated his tavern in the "Burleigh building", generally assumed to be building 5.⁶¹ However, for some unknown reason in 1907, Burleigh was licensed to sell liquor at White Hall.⁶² In 1909, the controversy over temperance began to affect the licensing of taverns. Over the next few years, several regular liquor retailers dropped in and out of the liquor business in an attempt to avoid confrontation.⁶³ Thomas Burleigh, however, hung in until at least June 1913. Prohibition went into affect July 1, 1914.⁶⁴

⁵⁶ The 1910 U.S. Bureau of the Census lists Thomas J. Burleigh, Sr., age 57, his wife Cora May Burleigh (listed as Mary in 1900 and 1920 Census), age 34, and their children: Thomas J., Jr., age 21; James W., age 14; Agnes G., age 10; John Thomas, age seven; and Eloise, age three. Henry C. Stoutzenburger was age 29 and Ab Marshall was age 23. Myrtle Stoutzenburger does not appear in the Harpers Ferry Census in 1910. [Note: Henry C. Stoutzenburger appears to also be spelled Stoutzenberger, Stoutsenburger, and Stoutsenberger.]

In 1918, Burleigh's eldest son, Thomas J. Burleigh, Jr. was called to service in WWI.⁶⁵ In 1926, Burleigh's youngest son, John T. Burleigh married Eileen Myerly of Sandy Hook, Maryland.⁶⁶ In 1929, John and his wife moved to Washington, D.C. John had been a clerk in Dittmyer's Drug Store for several years.⁶⁷ Burleigh's middle son, James W. Burleigh, died of pneumonia in Harpers Ferry in 1931.⁶⁸ In November 1932, Thomas Burleigh, Jr. died, followed by his father Thomas, Sr. about two weeks later in December.⁶⁹ Building 16 was vacant when Mary D. Burleigh sold it to the State of West Virginia in 1952.⁷⁰

Sale of Building 7 and Subsequent Use

The Roeder heirs sold building 7 to Charles L. Hopwood in 1874. Since Hopwood was a grocer, he may have operated a grocery store in that building.⁷¹ In March 1879, Hopwood sold building 7 to Alexander Murphy. Murphy sold the property to George R. Marquette in July of the same year.⁷²

J.H. Renner probably operated a saloon/restaurant in building 7 for all or part of the period from ca.1880 to the 1890s. Renner sold oysters and lunches in addition to liquor. In 1880, Renner's oyster saloon was located in the basement of the Valley House. However, by 1882 Renner's saloon was definitely located in building 7 because both the Spirit of Jefferson and the Virginia Free Press reported a fire in the Potomac Street saloon of J.H. Renner in the building owned by Mr. Marquette.⁷³ Records indicate that Marquette did not own any other property on Potomac Street. Figure 6, dated ca.1891, shows building 7 with "Oysters and Lunches" painted on the front of the building. Renner purchased Wager Lot 54A in 1892 and may have moved his business there at that time.⁷⁴

Building 7 housed a saloon for all or part of the period from ca.1894 to ca.1904.⁷⁵ Although Thomas Burleigh was issued a license to sell liquor in building 7 in 1907, the same building was listed as a restaurant on the 1907 Sanborn-Perris Insurance map.⁷⁶ Perhaps the restaurant also sold liquor, or else the building changed uses within the year.⁷⁷ In 1910, Thomas J. Burleigh, Sr. probably operated a saloon in building 7, since he was issued a license in that year to sell liquor at "White Hall".⁷⁸ In 1912, building 7 was used for hay and feed. It is unclear whether it was a hay and feed store or simply a warehouse for fodder.⁷⁹ Around 1913, Marquette sold building 7 (in use at this time as a dwelling) to T.M. Conner.⁸⁰ In 1922, building 7 was used as a store.⁸¹ In 1928, Laura Conner sold building 7 to Harry Rockenbaugh,⁸² and by 1933, building 7 was again in use as a dwelling.⁸³ In 1941, Aldridge Rockenbaugh, the sole heir of Harry Rockenbaugh, sold the property to Luke Loveless,⁸⁴ who, in turn, sold it to the State of West Virginia in 1952.⁸⁵ In 1955, a Park Service study indicated that building 7 must have been empty and neglected for years. Its condition is described as "flood damage; deterioration from neglect, walls sound."⁸⁶

CHRONOLOGY OF BUILDING USE: Building 16 (Frederick Roeder's House)

- ca. 1844-47 John Wilson or Frederick Roeder built the oldest portion of building 16. The original building was built of stone, two stories, with a gable roof.
- ca. 1848-49 Roeder added a two-story addition to the west end of the structure. This addition encroached three feet onto Wager lot 17, which Roeder purchased in 1848.
- ca. 1856-57 Roeder increased the height of the entire structure by one-and-a-half stories.
- 1861-62 Frederick Roeder killed on July 4, 1861. His daughter and son-in-law took the younger children into Maryland shortly afterward. Building 16 probably occupied by the military briefly in summer 1861, and again as a military headquarters and post office in February and March 1862, probably by Colonel Baxter of the 72nd Pennsylvania Regiment (the Philadelphia Fire Zouaves).
- ca. March
1862-81 The Kerns and the Roeder children returned to Harpers Ferry and took possession of building 16. They continued to live there until 1881. John J. Kern pursued a variety of occupations during these years, including running an oyster and ale restaurant, a catering business, and an ice cream saloon. There is no evidence that any of these businesses was located in building 16.
- 1881-1952 Kern, acting as administrator of Frederick Roeder's estate, sold Wager lot 16, containing buildings 5 and 16, to Bridget Burleigh. The Burleigh family, originally consisting of Bridget, her son and his family, lived in building 16 until at least 1920. The building was used as a residence at least until 1933.
- 1952 Building 16 was vacant when Mary D. Burleigh sold it to the State of West Virginia.

CHRONOLOGY OF BUILDING USE: Building 7 (White Hall)

- ca. 1839 William and Samuel Anderson constructed building 7, probably as a warehouse for their dry goods store in building 11.
- 1847 Frederick Roeder purchased building 7, "certain warehouse property, including the ground the said warehouse stands upon".
- 1847-55 Building 7 used for all or part of this period as a drinking house or tavern. Facade was probably painted white during this period.
- 1856 Roeder sold front portion of building to U.S. Government. This portion demolished and removed in order to widen the alley that would become Potomac St. Roeder added a new facade to building 7.

1855-61	Used for all or part of this period as a dwelling and warehouse.
1861-65	Used by the 72nd Pennsylvania Regiment under Colonel Baxter as a stable, for storage, and sleeping quarters for troops.
1872	James Roeder, Frederick Roeder's son, may have operated a saloon in building 5 or 7.
1873	The Roeder heirs sold building 7 to Charles L. Hopwood. Since Hopwood was a grocer, he may have operated a grocery store in building 7.
1879	Hopwood sold building 7 to Alexander Murphy in March and Murphy sold the property to George R. Marquette in July.
ca. 1880 -1890s	J.H. Renner probably operated a saloon/restaurant in building 7 for all or part of this period. Renner sold oysters and lunches in addition to liquor.
ca. 1894 -1904	Building 7 housed a saloon for all or part of this period.
1907	Building 7 in use as a restaurant and/or saloon.
1910	Thomas J. Burleigh probably operated a saloon in building 7.
1912	Building 7 used for hay and feed. It is unclear whether it was a hay and feed store or simply a warehouse for fodder.
1913	Building 7 used as a dwelling. Marquette sold property to T.M. Conner.
1922	Building 7 used as a store.
1928	Laura Conner sold building 7 to Harry Rockenbaugh.
1933	Building 7 in use as a dwelling.
1941	Aldridge Rockenbaugh, the sole heir of Harry Rockenbaugh, sold property to Luke Loveless.
1952	Luke Loveless sold building 7 to the State of West Virginia.
1955	A Park Service study indicates that building 7 must have been empty and neglected for years. Its condition is described as "flood damage; deterioration from neglect, walls sound."

EVIDENCE OF ORIGINAL FURNISHINGS

Discussion Of Sources

The following sources were used in documenting the furnishings of building 16, Frederick Roeder's parlor and confectionery, and building 7, White Hall Tavern:

1. Roeder inventory.

The "appraisement of the personal Estate of Frederick A. Roeder deceased" was not completed until August 3, 1865, four years after Roeder's death. Since the Roeder children abandoned their property for some or all of that period, it is probable that many of the household furnishings were stolen or destroyed by the occupying armies and the remaining townspeople. Therefore, although this inventory is an extremely important document, the amount and quality of items listed probably does not accurately reflect the complete Roeder estate at the time of his death in 1861. The furnishings plan for building 16 contains many items not listed on this inventory in order to make up for the pillage of the property that probably occurred between 1861 and 1865.

2. Claim of the estate of Frederick Roeder for restitution from the U.S. Government.

Administrators of the Roeder estate applied to the U.S. Government beginning in 1864 for rent and restitution for damages done to buildings 5, 7, and 16 by Federal troops between July 25, 1861, and March 25, 1862. Because of arguments over jurisdiction, the case was not heard until 1902 and not settled until 1906. The testimony of the Roeder children, of John J. Kern, Mary Roeder's husband, and of Thomas J. Burleigh sheds light on the uses of buildings 5, 7, and 16 during the Civil War.

The testimony specifically mentions that the buildings were occupied by Colonel Baxter and the 72nd Pennsylvania Regiment, also known as the Philadelphia Fire Zouaves. The interior walls of buildings 5 and 7 are covered with graffiti drawn by soldiers from that regiment. However, the 72nd Pennsylvania was not organized until August 1861. The 72nd was in Harpers Ferry, however, when the family returned in March 1862. The Kerns and Roeders may have assumed that they occupied their buildings for the entire period of their exile.

3. Personal and telephone interviews with Isabel Flanagan.

Mrs. Isabel Flanagan is a great-granddaughter of Frederick Roeder and has had a lifelong interest in the history of Harpers Ferry. Mrs. Flanagan's memories of life in Harpers Ferry in the early 20th century are invaluable for filling in the inevitable gaps left after careful examination of the newspapers. More importantly, Mrs. Flanagan is able to give the listener an impression of what it was like to live and work in this area in the 1920s and 1930s. Mrs. Flanagan has also collected an impressive amount of written material, photographs, and clippings into scrapbooks which serve as a veritable textbook of twentieth century Harpers Ferry life. These materials are supplemented by Mrs. Flanagan's own typed recollections.

4. Regimental Histories.

Although the information on Harpers Ferry contained in these histories is somewhat limited, these works did answer several nagging questions about life in Harpers Ferry during the military occupation of 1862.

5. Comparative Inventories.

Since no inventory of White Hall furnishings exists, inventories of other taverns from the same time period provided information about the customary furnishings required in a small tavern.

6. Comparative Interiors.

Paintings, engravings, drawings, trade cards, and other illustrations of mid-nineteenth century parlors, confectionaries, officer's quarters and taverns provided information on furniture placement and quality of furnishings that cannot be obtained easily from written sources.

7. Receipts from contemporary confectioners.

These receipts listed the types of candies and other foods sold by confectioners in the 1850s and 1860s.

Claim of the Estate of Frederick Roeder for Restitution from the U.S. Government.

Abstract of evidence from the Roeder estate claim of restitution for government use of buildings 5, 7, and 16 during the Civil War. The following evidence was taken under the rules of the court September 5, 1902:

James R. Roeder testifies:

My age 54 years; residence, Harper's Ferry, W. Va.; occupation, policeman; am a son of claimant and have an interest in this claim. (P. 1, Record.)

I resided at Harper's Ferry, W. Va., during the late war of the rebellion.

Loyalty. My father died on the 4th of July, 1861. He left seven children surviving him. Three boys and four girls. One was about two and one-half years older than me and one about five years younger.

My oldest brother, A.H. Roeder, was in the army three or four years--the Union army. He belonged to the Independent Loudoun Rangers, Capt. Grubb's company.

The children of F.A. Roeder were all Union, of course. One brother enlisted and another tried to but was too young and they would not take him.

They resided in Bolivar, W. Va., except in 1861 part of them were in Maryland, at Middletown and Frederick. (P. 3, Record.)

Merits. The Union army used three houses and a bakery belonging to my father's estate. The home place--a brick building--was used for the post office and officers' headquarters. It contained eleven rooms, situated on the main street, known as Washington street. It ought to have been worth at that time $18 to $20 per month.

The other two buildings were on Potomac street. They were built of brick. One had seven rooms and the other five. They used the lower part for horses and had forage in the upper part. The larger building was worth $10 per month and the other $6.00. (P. 4, Record.)

They used the bakery to bake bread in. There was a wood house and shed connected with this. It adjoined the main building. They tore down these buildings and used them in building their camps. My father was in the bakery business at the beginning of the war. He was the only baker in the town.

Colonel Baxter of the 72nd Penn. Fire Zouaves occupied the home building. I dont know whether he was the commanding officer or not.

They took possession not quite a month after my father died, July 4, 1861. I could not say for sure but I think they remained there that winter. (P. 4, Record.)

Merits. Cross-examination.

Mr. Baxter and his staff had control of the bakery. They were in the house. My father employed the two older boys in the bakery and sometimes he would get others.

The same officers had control of the buildings on Potomac street. (P. 5, Record.)

John J. Kern testifies:

My age 66 years; residence, Harper's Ferry, W. Va.; retired; am a son-in-law of claimant and have an interest in this claim. (P. 6, Record.)

I resided in Harper's Ferry during the war, except I went over into Maryland when the confederates came here.

Merits. I am familiar with the buildings in Harper's Ferry belonging to the F.A. Roeder estate during the war. I lived in the main building at the beginning of the war.

There was one building on Washington street and two on Potomac street. (P. 6, Record.)

They were all used by Colonel Baxter's Zouaves. The large brick building on Washington street was used for a post-office and offices. The two brick buildings on Potomac street were used for stables and other purposes.

They took possession shortly after Mr. Roeder was killed.

The children had all been taken over into Maryland. Their mother was dead and there was no one to take care of them.

They held it continuously until Baxter left and they used them off and on during the entire war. I think Baxter left sometime in the spring of 1862.

The main building with the bakery in the back was worth at that time $25.00 per month. The other two on Potomac street were worth $10.00 each and did bring $15.00 at one time. (P. 7, Record.)

when the U.S. left them. The windows had been taken out and removed to Camp Hill to build quarters with. I guess it would have cost $1000.00 at that time to restore the buildings to the condition in which they were before the U.S. authorities used the same. (P. 8, Record.)

Loyalty. The Roeder children were all Union. Their father was a strong Union man and he heard that the Stars and Stripes had been raised on Maryland Heights and he wanted to see the stars and stripes up again and when he went out to see them a stray shot hit him and killed him.

I was a Union man all the time. (P. 9, Record.)

Cross-examination.

There were seven rooms altogether in the main building and three in the bakery part. One of the buildings on Potomac street had five rooms and the other three. They used the main building for a post-office but I do not know who was postmaster. One of them was Billy Wall. I do not remember what other officers used it. I can't say who used the buildings on Potomac street. They were in and out all the time. The building on Washington street was worth not less than $2000.00 at the time the occupancy commenced. The other two on Potomac street about one thousand dollars. (P. 10, Record.)

Mary L. Kern testifies:

My age 59 years; residence, Harper's Ferry, W. Va.; occupation, house-keeper; daughter of claimant. I resided in Harper's Ferry during the war.

Loyalty. I am the oldest child. I was born in 1843. Our family Bible has been destroyed and I do not know that I can give the ages of the children exactly. Matilda is two years younger and A.H. Roeder two years younger than Matilda. James is next and the others younger. (P. 11, Record.)

Merits. I know that U.S. authorities occupied buildings belonging to my father's estate during the war, --our home place and two on Potomac street. Our home place contained eleven rooms; one on Potomac street seven and the other five.

Our father was killed July 4, 1861, and the troops took possession of the house that month. They gave up the home building and we took possession in March, 1862. The other two they used after that at different times during the war. They were brick buildings. They occupied our home building for a post-office and officers quarters. The Potomac street buildings for stables and warehouses for storing feed etc. (P. 12, Record.)

Cross-examination.

The home building was three and one-half stories. The two buildings on Potomac street were two and one-half stories high. I think it was Colonel Baxter who had control of the home house, and it was the same troops had the other two. (P. 13, Record.)

Thomas J. Burleigh testifies:

I am past 50 years of age; residence, Harper's Ferry, W. Va.; not related to the claimant and has no interest in this claim. (P. 14, Record.)

Merits. I know the U.S. authorities occupied the brick building on Washington street belonging to the Roeder estate, in which I now live.

There are ten rooms in the building now and it is the same as it was then. They took possession I think it was the first year of the war and I think they held it for about a year. I do not know the exact time but I remember very distinctly of them going out and when they came back. They used it for a post-office and there were some soldiers in there too. (P. 14, Record.)

I dont remember about them occupying the two buildings on Potomac street but I remember they were very much damaged by some one. (P. 15, Record.)

Cross-examination waived.

The following evidence was taken under the rules of the court November 21, 1905:

James R. Roeder testifies:

I am 56 years of age; reside at Harper's Ferry, W. Va. occupation, policeman; I am a son of Frederick A. Roeder, the deceased claimant, and have an interest in this claim. (P. 17, Record.)

Heirs. My father was killed here July 4, 1861. He left no will. My mother died on 23rd of March, 1861. My father had seven children, three boys and four girls. There are six still living, two sons and four daughters. (P. 17, Record.)

Their names, that is of the living, with their post-office addresses are:

Mary L. Kern, Harper's Ferry, W. Va.
James R. Roeder, do.
Julia A. Cole, Sandy Hook, Md.
Amelia A. Shewbridge, do.

Matilda E. Sutton, Baltimore, Md.
A.H. Roeder, Brunswick, Md.

Albert T. Roeder, died twelve or fifteen years ago. He left two children, a son and a daughter. Their names and addresses are:

Joseph A. Roeder, Brunswick, Md.
Mrs. Laura Porter, do.

(P. 19, Record.)

Cross-examination waived.

Mary L. Kern also testifies at the same time and place relative to the heirs of Frederick A. Roeder and gives their names and addresses the same as above set forth. (P. 19, Record.)

Personal and Telephone Interviews with Isabel Kern Flanagan.

Excerpts from the August 20, 1992, interview.

Pat Chickering [PC]: Have you heard, do you know any family stories, about when they left the Roeder house, why they left the Roeder house; do you know what happened during the war; do you know anything about that?

Isabel Flanagan [IF]: Yes. What I heard, and in that report...[refers to data on Roeder family presented to Mrs. Flanagan some years ago by a HAFE source]...

PC: Just what you've heard?

IF: Well, it was just, I don't know how they lived, I don't know how my grandmother lived through the thing because; they were Union sympathizers, and the town changed hands so many times, and they were robbed blind of their belongings because--how in the world an 18 year old girl could assume responsibility for younger brothers and sisters, and her husband who was only 24; because her mother and father were both gone now, and they had to evacuate all of those kids over to Middletown or to Frederick, back and forth as they changed hands; but when they came back the place would be looted, there wouldn't be anything hardly left to come back to. And my grandmother just seemed to be a tiny little person who could cope with situations then and later.

PC: Did the family come back to the Roeder house, then, or did they come back and live somewhere else?

IS: They came back there but there wasn't anything much to come back to. So between that and, now I have a cousin that was born in that house I'm talking about after they left the Roeder house, she will be 98 next week, and she's very alert, and she's the one that used to come in here often every year; she's the one that brought the picture of my grandmother and the [bunk (bundt) pan?] and she lives in Portland, Oregon. She's the daughter of Mary Elizabeth DeLauder.

PC: Daughter of Mary Elizabeth Delauder--okay. It seems to me, as you have expressed it, almost unbelievable that they would come back to the same house; in other words, how did they live during the war, where did the money come from: Was this from your grandfathers....

IF: Well, of course, my great-grandfather, my grandmother's father, he had a lot of rent coming in from a lot of different places at the time; now whether they paid her, I don't know. And of course I wasn't old enough to even think about, you know, things like that. I was 9 or 10 when she died, I guess. And she lived with us a while.

PC: Do you know if they may have--as far as you know they went back to live in the Roeder house?

IF: Well, it's vague because my great, my own grandfather, the one that died that I don't even remember, he sued the government for the use, because the Union soldiers and the Confederates, too, but the Union, they use the bakery for, you know, to bake with, and they the soldiers were camped in there and they used it; part of the buildings, one of the taverns, for horses even.

PC: I have a copy of that claim, back in the office.

IF: Yes I know, it drug out for years and years; see the Roeders, neither of my great-grandparents, left a will, so they had nothing to go on and the court in Charles Town appointed my grandfather Kern as a temporary administrator. So, I don't know, I don't know how they managed, really. I know that they had a struggle, I do know that, because when they lived in the, when my father was single, and he went to school, he went to work when he was 14 years old; you would be amazed at the things that he, that my father did and that those kids did; he helped his father in the bakery; they must have gone back to the house, because my dad helped some in the bakery, too.

PC: Let me ask you a question about that, then. Thinking of the property, the Roeder property, where was the bakery?

IF: Right across the back porch, that brick building, I believe it's a 2 story, I believe there's a storage room or something up over it. But it's right across the back porch.

PC: It was in the 2 story brick building across the back porch.

IF: The red brick; and you went outside, of course, you know, and back then you went outside to go upstairs, but then they put those winding stairs with the door at the bottom on the 2 floors, like in the house that was next to us. That house next to us, where I was born, that was a log cabin standing during the Civil War. Now they built our house, and not--I spent half of my time even at night in that house. They had a, a shell went through that house. Went through the bedroom door and through a piece of furniture. That massive piece of furniture was in the basement for years.

PC: You alluded to something before we started taping that I want to get back to. This is jumping all over the place but that doesn't matter. You have a piece of family furniture that you. . .

IF: Yes, I have my grandmother's little marble top dresser here, that I have made my will and I have willed it to the Park, to the Roeder House; I'll show it to you before you go. It's the only piece of furniture that I know of that was hers and she brought it, we've had it in our house ever since I was born.

PC: Are there any other Roeder artifacts around, that you know of?

IF: There's only one other person by the name of Roeder. And that's Linwood, and he lives out here at Inwood. His wife died, I saw him down here at the funeral home, I went down there--you know, he's supposed to be adopted. He's Albert and Grace Roeder's son....

PC: Do you remember any family talk about the sorts of things that J.J. [Kern] or Frederick [Roeder] made and sold in the bakery and confectionery shop?

IF: Oh yes. I heard dad talk about. They used to make candy. And they had these great big marble slabs. They made even taffy. But dad talked mostly about the cake decorations. He said his father could really decorate a wedding cake. I'll tell you, they made a, he made a lot of little pies, because they did not have diners on the cars, and this is something that people, my age, would really remember; my dad and even Edna, my niece, of course this was much, much later, but the cars not having diners...Charlie Smith was a friend of my father's and his father had an ice cream factory. And they used to even take some kind of cones or something. But they used to take my great-great-grandfather's [sic] pies, these trays, basket types, on the trains and sell them all.

PC: We have references to J.J. catering parties and things, and so, he was generally in the food business.

IF: Yes, he was a real bona fide German baker. I have one thing; I have his recipe for shortcake. Strawberry...Old German shortcake. That's about all.

PC: Refresh my memory. Where did he conduct this business from, do you know?

IF: One side of that house was open.

PC: From the Roeder house.

IF: Yes. From what, now, not that I remember, because, you know, the people were living there, when I remember, but from what I've read about it there was one side next to, on the alley side, that was open, that they had I guess like a show room, a store room. Never thought to ask daddy that, about that.

PC: In other words, it was in Building 16, what we call the Roeder House?

IF: It was in...Oh yes. He had other buildings, though.

PC: We have references to J.J. Kern's Oyster Saloon. Do you know where that would have been?

IF: J.J. Kern, a saloon?

PC: Oyster saloon. This was about late 1870s.

IF: The only thing I remember about oysters at all is I used to go with my dad over to get a little keg of oysters off of the canal boats. We'd get a watermelon, in season, and oysters and things like that. But I don't remember.

p. 120. At five A.M. on this day [22d of September] we moved away from the battle-field of Antietam, and, passing through Sharpsburg, reached the Potomac. General Williams, on the advance, seized Maryland Heights, and the Second Corps forded the river at Harper's Ferry, and, pushing out to Bolivar, re-occupied the place.

Here we were destined to spend all the beautiful month of October, the entire Army of the Potomac being located in this vicinity, and occupied in refitting and preparing for an active campaign, until the chief was ready to move on the enemy....There had been no opportunity since leaving Harrison's Landing to obtain any clothing or shoes, and most of the men, in these respects, were in a deplorable condition....

General Sumner placed his corps in commanding positions on Bolivar Heights, and ordered Captain Pell and his men of the First Brigade of Sedgwick's Division to occupy the Ferry, as a provost guard; while a large detail, under the command of a captain, was made from the Philadelphia Brigade for the same duty on Camp Hill and Bolivar....

The large mansion and surrounding buildings occupied formerly by the superintendent of the Government works, were used as headquarters and as a guard-house....

When our corps took possession of the town, all the stores and business places were vacant; but soon after, traders and sutlers applied for permission to enter the lines and open their stores of articles for sale to the soldiers. Licenses were freely granted, subject to certain rules; one of these being a prohibition from selling intoxicating liquors. The stores were rented by the provost-marshal at such prices as he thought the occupants could afford to pay, and the money received was turned over to the surgeons for the benefit of the sick and wounded.

FURNISHINGS PLAN

OVERVIEW OF THE FURNISHINGS FOR BUILDING 16

Roeder's Parlor and Confectionery, and Col. De Witt Clinton Baxter's Headquarters

The 1865 inventory of Frederick Roeder's estate provides the framework for the furnishing of the Roeder parlor. The sofa, tables, chairs, rocker, stove, mirror, clock, venetian blinds, and carpet appear on the inventory and are appropriate for a parlor. Since the Roeder property was pillaged while the Roeders were in Maryland, many pre-war Roeder belongings do not appear on the inventory. The transfer-printed teaware and the black basalt vase represent ceramic types uncovered during archeological excavations in the Roeder backyard. The toys and sewing objects were added to the plan based on the ages of the children who lived in the house in 1860. Other objects were selected to fill out the furnishings plan based on illustrations of contemporary interiors.

The interpretation of the parlor as Colonel Baxter's headquarters is based largely on drawings of officer's headquarters done by Civil War artists. The appearance of the regimental colors is based on an 1884 description.

The furnishing of the confectionery is largely based on period illustrations of contemporary confectionery stores found in books and on business stationary and trade cards. The candies in the jars are examples of sweets listed on receipts from the 1850s and 1860s. The marble slab and showcase appear on the Roeder inventory. Family tradition and newspaper accounts describe elaborately decorated wedding cakes. Items like wrapping paper, string, and scales would be required for a confectionery to operate.

OVERVIEW OF THE FURNISHINGS FOR BUILDING 7

White Hall Tavern

Due to the lack of site-specific evidence for White Hall Tavern, building 7 will house a furnished exhibit. Approximately one-half of the interior will be historically furnished based on numerous contemporary tavern illustrations. The bar, set off in an alcove of the tavern room, is typical of small taverns and drinking houses during the first half of the nineteenth century. Located in the northwest corner, the bar will be furnished with bottles, glassware, and other accoutrements.

Early tavernkeepers generally bought their liquor in casks instead of bottles. Each day, the barkeep refilled the decanters kept on the shelves behind the bar from casks stored in the basement. The punch bowls on the shelves were used to mix large amounts of toddy or punch. These drinks were shared among a group of people and were very popular during the eighteenth century but were becoming less popular by the mid-nineteenth.

The space in front of the bar and in the middle of the room will be furnished with tables and chairs outfitted with appropriate small items. An iron stove will be located in the middle of the room in front of the enclosed staircase. The furnished part of the room will be lit by small floodlights, leaving the unfurnished part of the room in darkness. Two-dimensional, life-size photographic blow-ups of tavern occupants taken from period sources will populate the room and also help to screen the unfurnished part of the room from view.

Additionally, a case of exhibits will be pulled up to the single door in the eastern facade of building 7 during regular park hours. This exhibit will describe White Hall Tavern and its relationship to the town and armory. The case will contain a few very stable objects to enliven the display, such as bottles, crockery, and possibly archeological finds.

RECOMMENDED FURNISHINGS and WORKING DRAWINGS

TOYS for older boys, such as marbles, soldiers, wagons, corncobs, etc. (on floor near stove)	The older Roeder boys, aged 11 and 13, would have played with these kinds of toys. See figure 12.	Acquire reproductions or period pieces.

Object and Location	Evidence	Recommendation
DOLL with clothing (on rocking chair)	Eight-year old Emma Roeder probably played with dolls. See figure 13.	Acquire reproduction or period piece.
Pull TOY (on floor in southeast corner)	Young Albert, aged three in 1860, probably played with a hand-me-down toy such as this.	Acquire reproduction or period piece.
CRADLE with mattress, BEDDING CRADLE QUILT (near stove)	Julia Roeder was only one year old in 1860, and presumably would have napped near where her mother was working. See figure 14.	Acquire reproductions.

When the parlor is being interpreted as Colonel Baxter's headquarters, the following items should be removed: books, all toys, cradle and bedding, clock, vase, tea set, rocking chair, two prints on south wall, sewing basket, and clothing to be mended. The center table should be moved to the southeast corner. The bottles and glasses should be moved onto the center table. The remaining chair in the center of the room should be used as a desk chair for the rectangular table that will take the place of the center table. The solar lamp should be moved onto the rectangular table in the center of the room. The chair on the south wall left of the door to the staircase should be used as a desk chair for the table in that location. One of the oil lamps should be moved to that table as well. The following items should be added:

CONCEPTS FOR INTERPRETIVE PANELS

Building 16 - Roeder's Parlor

This free-standing interpretive panel will identify Frederick Roeder and his family, describing the tragedy of Roeder's death and his family's flight into Maryland. Domestic themes that may be addressed include living the American dream, the raising and pastimes of children, and the role of women and older daughters in the running of a household. Additional themes concern the impact of the Civil War on people living in Harpers Ferry, who faced the fear of death and injury, the need to flee at a moment's notice, and the pillage and confiscation of property.

Building 16 - Baxter's Headquarters

This panel will explain the military's custom of seizing buildings for its own use. The panel will describe how Colonel Baxter, commander of the 72nd Pennsylvania Regiment, probably occupied this building as his headquarters in spring of 1862 and how he quartered his men in the buildings nearby.

Building 16 - Roeder's Confectionery

This panel will describe Frederick Roeder's business as a confectioner, a trade brought by him to this country from his native Germany. Roeder sold his confections in this store and probably also carried pies down to the trains when they stopped in Harpers Ferry, since the trains did not have dining cars at that time. The panel may also describe some of the confections displayed in the shop, including some candies still familiar today.

Building 7 - White Hall Tavern

Using historic photographs, archeological remains, and contemporary descriptions, this exhibit will describe the appearance of Potomac Street during the 1850s when the armory was located across the street. The exhibit will address the lifestyle of the armory workers and the friction that existed between the armory and the town over the row of gin shops that lined Potomac Street when the armory was in operation.

U.S. Department of the Interior Mission Statement

As the Nation's principal conservation agency, the Department of the Interior has responsibility for most of our nationally-owned public lands and natural resources. This includes fostering sound use of our land and water resources; protecting our fish, wildlife, and biological diversity; preserving the environmental and cultural values of our national parks and historical places; and providing for the enjoyment of life through outdoor recreation. The Department assesses our energy and mineral resources and works to ensure that their development is in the best interests of all our people by encouraging stewardship and citizen participation in their care. The Department also has a major responsibility for American Indian reservation communities and for people who live in island territories under U.S. administration.
