Dear Trail Advocate,

Everyone is talking about partnerships these days. Trail advocates should take great pride in knowing they wrote the book on partnerships a long time ago. Think about it. What other public resources were built and maintained on the collective shoulders of so many volunteers? Roads and railways, to which trails are often compared, certainly cannot boast such working commitment from Americans. The process of linking communities and natural areas by trails and greenways has itself been an act of building partnerships among citizens, public land managers and businesses. In this way, trail people showed us years ago what it means to re-invent government.

Being a good trail partner also means sharing with others similarly engaged in their own communities—whether it's sharing a success story, a case study, a fundraising idea, or conservation strategy with an advocate working on another trail in another part of the country. It can even mean just listening or answering a letter of inquiry. However much we focus on our own trail projects, and whatever the nature of the conflicts that sometimes divide trail enthusiasts, we all can be partners in the effort to connect America by trail.

That's one of the ideas behind this directory. We hope you will use it often. And we hope you'll give your time to trail advocates who find you through this directory. Building a national network of trails means building a stronger network of trail organizations, as well.

Happy trails,

David Lillard
AHS President

Dear Trail Enthusiast:

Each trail each time is a new place, but trails have some things in common. They are the lines connecting the dots of human experience. All history -- like all politics -- is local, and trails connect localities. Events linked over space are trails; events linked over time are stories. There is no better way to experience the life embodied in those stories than to take to a trail at the same pace as that of the actors in those stories -- to walk, or ride, engaging with the appearance of new landscapes at a sufficiently deliberate pace so as to permit that landscape to "register" as a photograph registers, but, unlike a photograph or a videograph, in all dimensions and engaging all our senses.

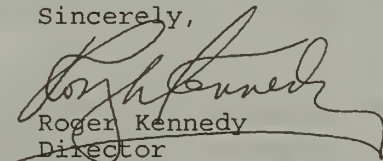

Trails are also places in themselves, attenuated and ever-changing, having their own integrity. Many come to mind: the Santa Fe Trail, the Grand Portage Trail, the Great Hopewell Road, and the Caminos Reals.

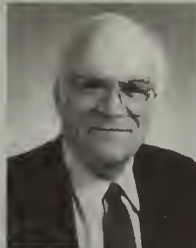

Preserving trails is one aspect of preserving places. Both preservation and conservation are traversed by them, because trails have history and because they traverse landscapes. Trails, made by many feet, are "common ground," easements into community. As the very concepts of common ground, of common understandings, or community are all under threat today, trails help in the defence. They speak of the past and present necessity. They speak of one person going to see another, symbolizing both reflection and understanding.

I've been a hiker for 65 years. For me, trails have been the primary way of engaging with the earth and with the other species with which we share it. I've always liked the idea of walking to places -- especially historical places -- and have enjoyed doing so from southern Manhattan to the Napali Coast.

This directory presents many of the groups and agencies which are responsible for many of my favorite places strung together, and recalls for me a lot of joy outdoors. These places need protection. Let's join together, in joy, to protect them.

Sincerely,

Roger Kennedy
Director

PURPOSE and METHODOLOGY

THIS 1995 DIRECTORY OF TRAILS ORGANIZATIONS AND MANAGING AGENCIES INTENDS TO:

- Encourage the involvement and interaction of citizen groups and government agencies in trail projects and programs to work toward the goal of "Trails for All Americans," a 1990 agenda jointly issued by the federal government and the trails community;
- Help groups that have common trail interests and goals to connect for a common purpose;
- Offer a source of contacts for those interested in volunteering to help with development, construction and maintenance of trails;
- Provide a source of contacts for those individuals and/or citizen groups just starting out on their own trails project;
- Promote, strengthen, and help unify the trails community nationwide.

ABOUT THE LISTINGS:

The Directory includes organizations concerned with either a single trail or a system of trails in their communities, states, regions, or the Nation as a whole. Some are interested in trails as recreation, others as transportation, others for the role greenways play in ecosystems, or for health and fitness. All share a desire to see trails established and protected. The Appendices list national resources, BLM offices, and a variety of international trail groups.

The editors are unable to list every organization concerned with trails. This is a rapidly growing list which has reached more than 10,000 potential entries. We have included organizations with national, state and/or regional focus. In compiling the information in this Directory, American Hiking Society contacted each citizen organization listed in the American Hiking Society's federally assisted trails Interest Group Database, which has been compiled over the last 10 years, asking permission to list the organization, verify the existing data, and request additional information. Local organizations are included only if they responded to our survey and signified that they wanted to be included.

Inclusion in the Directory does not constitute or imply endorsement by the National Park Service or American Hiking Society. Some information has been edited without confirmation by the organizations or agencies. The publishers will correct inaccuracies prior to the compilation of the next directory. We welcome updates, corrections, and additional organizations for input into the revised Directory. A form is provided at the end of this directory for your use in providing updated or additional information. Please submit additional listings and corrections to:

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

The 1995 Trails Organization and Managing Agencies Directory was prepared by:

American Hiking Society, Susan A. Henley, Project Manager and
National Park Service, Steve Elkinton, Project Manager

The preparers would like to thank the many people involved in the production of the Directory. Chuck Kines, Laura Loftus, Jason Crawford, Natalie Lyons, and Matthew Troup, of American Hiking Society's staff or interns, spent many hours and much patience in completing this project.

The staff of the National Park Services Recreation Resources Assistance Division, and selected field staff, offered invaluable assistance in reviewing and correcting the final draft.

U.S. Department of the Interior Mission Statement

As the Nation's principal conservation agency, the Department of the Interior has responsibility for most of our nationally-owned public lands and natural resources. This includes fostering sound use of our land and water resources; protecting our fish, wildlife, and biological diversity; preserving the environmental and cultural values of our national parks and historical places; and providing for the enjoyment of life through outdoor recreation. The Department assesses our energy and mineral resources and works to ensure that their development is in the best interests of all our people by encouraging stewardship and citizen participation in their care. The Department also has a major responsibility for American Indian reservation communities and for people who live in island territories under U.S. administration.
